INDIANA.

THE Mutual Movies' Advertising Campaign has struck Indianapolis and in the opinion of those interested is "getting over."

After some delay due to trouble with building arrangements, the Idle Hour Amusement Company house in Irvington, is again going forward. It is now expected to be able to open it on or before January 1.

The Municipal and Commercial Film Company has leased the Straws Mill Rod and Gun Club at New Albany, and is now clearing the ground and preparing the vicinity for taking some Western scenes. L. D. Kohlmeyer says the company may make use of the site to film some winter stuff.

The Motionscope Company, Indianapolis, has just completed a film series showing operations in the Eli Lilly & Co. factory, which the Lilly Company expects to use in educating doctors and nurses to the merits of Lilly drugs and serums. The company has the same sort of series in preparation for the Kahn Tailoring Company to supplement a former series.

The Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce publicity division is interested in an industrial film of Indianapolis. Recently the chamber conducted an excursion around the city by the Belt Railway, which touched upon all the important industries, and carried 2,500 business men as passengers. The idea in which the chamber is interested is the same sort of excursion by film. The motion picture men are representing to the chamber that the same sort of excursion by film would cost about twice as much, but would last forever and be reproducible every time it might be advisable to give ocular proof of the city's industrial activity.

The Lyric Theater, of Tipton, Ind., has been bought by K. A. Bechtold, of Sharpsville, who will remove it to Sharpsville. When Bechtold opens the doors of the theater there it will be to give the Sharpsville citizens their first chance to see a show of the kind at home. Bechtold had to make arrangements with the Indiana Union Traction Company for current, before he could open the house.

The Garrick Theater, Indianapolis, recently installed a pipe organ.

The Essanay Company, at Chicago, has made the film with which Samuel Lewis Shank is to illustrate his talking act opening this week at Kansas City, on the Sullivan & Considine circuit. The former mayor of Indianapolis opens in the Empress Theater. The pictures will illustrate the high cost of living idea that Mayor Shank and his potato sales made famous. It will show the various hands through which the egg passes from the time it leaves the nest until it lands scrambled. Then the pictures will show the cost of high living as compared with the low cost of simple living—how they do it on the farm, where pa gets in the wood and ma does the cooking, and how the second generation in town has a private bar and slits the silk skirt and lives a push button existence at so much per push. Of course there's a good climax.

All Shank is expected to do is act natural and tell the story of the pictures with high lights from his own experience at bucking the middleman. Inasmuch as Shank never talked publicly three minutes in his life without getting a laugh, and couldn't commit a monolog to memory in six years, the solution of the problem of an act for him is believed to have been reached in the film stunt. It was Shank's own suggestion, worked out by his manager, H. K. Burton. Shank had not intended to take to the footlights until Jan. 1st, but when Fred Lincoln, manager of the S. & C. circuit, heard of his resignation as mayor, he demanded immediate service, so Shank jumped to Kansas City and will open with scarcely a chance at rehearsal. He is a headline feature.

The problem of how to interest a church-going suburb in the moving picture theater has been solved by H. L. Whitehead, who opened his house in Irvington, the "classic suburb" of Indianapolis. He put out the S. R. O. sign for two performances. It is the only picture house in the suburb. Every other exhibitor fought shy of it, all of them having a feeling it would never succeed. Now, everybody admits that Whitehead has a very promising enterprise. He found the favor of the suburbanites by interesting some of its best men in the project, by promising that he would show nothing but clean and instructive films, and that he would give no Sunday shows. The house has not been named. He distributed folders at the opening, offering a money prize for the best name that could be suggested. The judges in the name contest are to be three of Irvington's best known citizens, one of them a county judge, and one a college president. He is charging ten cents admission.

The Central Amusement Company plans to build another theater in Indianapolis, at 115 North Illinois street. The ground is being cleared. The new house will cost $115,000 and is to be called the Isis. It is to be modeled after the house of the same name in Denver, which is credited with being one of the most beautiful in the West.

S. C. Pool, of Morgantown, Ind., has opened a new theater, using Universal service exclusively.

Work is progressing on the People's Amusement Company Theater, at Delaware and Sixteenth street, and upon the house being built at Central avenue and Twelfth streets, in Indianapolis.

The Wild Opera House, Noblesville, Ind., has been overhauled and redecorated. Grover Ranck, formerly of Toledo, O., is in charge.

"Pop" Lipps, owner of the Opera House, Alexandria, Ind., makes good elderberry wine, according to J. J. Schnitzer, of the Central Film Service, Indianapolis.

Philip Skora, Evansville, Ind., has just completed remodeling his theater, the Columbia, at a cost of several thousand dollars.

Many of the out of the city subscribers to film service supplied from Indianapolis, missed the service during the street car and interurban strike. It was impossible at all times to get the reels out on time.

Sam Dreyfuss, manager of the Princess Theater, in Terre Haute, is thinking very seriously of enlarging his theater. He can't always pack them in.

Col. F. M. Savage is to build a new theater in Gary, Ind. It will seat 650 persons, according to Harry Hall, who is the Colonel's business agent in Gary.

The Empress Feature Film Company, Indianapolis, is pushing the Apex film "Through the Clouds." They are having difficulty with exhibitors who want the Kalem film "From the Manger to the Cross." They all want it for Christmas.

NEW ENGLAND AND CANADA.

MR. W. J. McDONALD, of 95 Milk street, Boston, reports the erection and sale of the Allston Theater, 128 Brighton avenue, near the corner of Harvard avenue. The plans, by Architect George N. Meseroe, call for the erection, for Walker & Watson, of an absolutely fireproof theater, costing $100,000, with a total seating capacity of 1,200. The building is to be of brick, stone and concrete, with a frontage of 70 feet, and a depth of 132 feet. The stage has a width of 70 feet and a depth of 27 feet, with a proscenium opening 35 feet wide and 25 feet high. The stage is to have all the latest improvements for the presentation of pictures and vaudeville. Special attention has been given to the acoustic properties, ventilating plant and the electric lighting, which is to be the "direct-indirect" system. The safety of patrons has been given first consideration; the theater being open on all four sides, with twice as many exits as the law requires. The auditorium floor will be of concrete, with no basement, making it absolutely non-combustible. The mezzanine floor contains the ladies' waiting rooms and offices. The front is to be of classic style of architecture, built of Norman brick, with Indiana limestone trimmings, and a marquee of 42 feet long will extend the entire length of the sidewalk.

J. A. Eslow, general manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange, 1100 Boylston street, Boston, is offering a 24 sheet stand of paper (size 9" by 21'), free of charge to any Universal exhibitor who will post these 24 sheets in his city, for a thirty-day showing. Any Universal exhibitor can secure from Mr. Eslow as many of these sheets as he can use. The paper is striking in its unique individuality, and advertises not only the Universal program, but also leaves plenty of space for the exhibitor to print on it: "Can Be Seen Daily at —— Theater." Although this proposition was only advanced on December 3, a great demand has already come, and Mr. Eslow states that the advertising stunt is meeting with unqualified success.

Although competition is unusually keen, the Beacon Theater, Boston, continues on in its successful career. Mr. Jacob Lourie, general manager of this house, has decided to raise the admission price on Saturdays to 15 cents, while on Sundays and holidays, the admission price will be 20 cents. The Exclusive service of the General Film Company appeals very strongly to the Beacon's select patronage. "The Black Countess," a three-reel Pathe exclusive, created a great deal of favorable comment at the Beacon this week.

A. S. Schaller has been appointed assistant manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston. In addition to his duties as auditor and credit man, Mr. Schaller will assist manager Eslow in an executive capacity.

A recent incorporation is the Colonial Amusement Company, of Boston. This is a $5,000 concern, with Alexander E. Ross, Martin F. Eissenberg and Myron J. Hirsche named as the promoters.

On Saturday, December 6, a dress rehearsal was held in the United States Circuit Court, Boston, for the moving picture show that is to be presented before Judges Putnam, Hodge and Brown on Tuesday, December 9, when the United Shoe Machinery's case comes up for the continued hearing. The moving picture machines and films were moved into the court room, and a first-class show was given for two hours, before President Sidney Winslow, of the United Shoe Machinery Co., Louis Coolidge, treasurer; Charles F. Choate, one of the company's counsel, and John A. O'Connell. All of the machinery manufactured by the United Shoe Company, was shown in the making and operating. The manufacture of shoes, by the use of the United Shoe's machinery, was illustrated and scenes showing the uses to which machinery could be put were thrown on the screen. The performance lasted nearly two hours, and the officials of the company expressed themselves satisfied with the exhibit. This is the first time that moving pictures have been introduced as a part of evidence in a Federal case in the history of the United States Courts in Boston. President Winslow himself, directed the presentation of the pictures and, at times, assisted the lecturer in making certain features clear.

Pantage's Theater, at Winnipeg, Can., is being pushed ahead very rapidly, and this 2,100-seat house should open on or about December 22. The policy will be vaudeville and pictures, and the theatre is considered to be one of the finest in Canada.

Clarence L. Dean, for three years manager of the Orpheum Theater, Winnipeg, Can., has severed his connections with that house. E. J. Sullivan, a Chicago man, was chosen to fill Mr. Dean's place.

W. L. Joy, manager of the Beaver Theater, Toronto, Canada, had a most auspicious opening this week. The Beaver is a thoroughly first-class house in every way, and is fireproof and generally superior. It has a good location in the western part of the city, and the policy of vaudeville and pictures is making good.

The stock company shows that have been offered at the Colonial Theater, Pittsfield, Mass., did not appeal to the public there, and this policy has been abandoned.

Rev. W. J. Foran, of St. Anne's Rectory, is considered an expert judge of moving pictures, as he has given moving picture shows in the rectory for about two years. Speaking of the Universal's "Ivanhoe," which he used, Rev. Foran remarked, "It is a thing of lucious beauty, and deserves unstinted praise." "Capt. Kidd," "Under the Black Flag," and "The Beauty and the Beast," all secured through the Universal's Boston offices, came in for a large measure of praise from Rev. Foran.

H. E. Brenton was re-elected president, and E. L. Spring, the secretary-treasurer of the Boston Musicians' Protective Association last week. W. A. Barrington Sargent is the new vice-president. Pres. Brenton, Vice-president Barrington-Sargent and W. G. Dodge were named as the delegates to the national gathering, soon to be held.

S. Z. Poli's new theater at Springfield, Mass., named Poli's Palace, is scheduled to open to the public on Christmas Day. Mr. Gordon Wrighter has been selected to manage the Palace, and has already been relieved of his duties as manager of Poli's other Springfield house, in order that he could devote his undivided attention to the final arrangements of the Palace. Mr. Stewart Lithgow has succeeded Mr. Wrighter.

John Bunny is now a full-fledged member of the Boston Local of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, as Mr. T. C. Barrows, treasurer of local 182, journeyed to New York this week and presented Mr. Bunny with a gold membership Card at the Vitagraph studios. Mr. Bunny was in Boston during the Labor Day Parade, and was the special shining light of the Local's delegation in the parade. Mr. Barrows was appointed chairman of a special committee to present Mr. Bunny with the membership as a mark of appreciation.

F. D. Halliday, sales manager of the Ammex Western Features, made a flying trip through New England and Canada this week, and sold "The Fatal Reckoning" and "The Barrier of Blood," to the Consolidated Film Company, of Montreal.

A. W. Woodrow, for a number of years connected with the Grand Opera House, Kingston, Ont., Can., has resigned. As a mark of appreciation, Manager D. P. Dranigan presented Woodrow with a set of fine gold "triple-links," pin set with pearls, on behalf of the employees. Mr. Leonard O'Neill has succeeded Mr. Woodrow.

It is understood that the Kinemacolor pictures, which have been a feature at Fox's Theater, New Britain, Conn., are to be discontinued, as are "Country Store" nights. The admission price has been reduced to ten cents and hereafter the photoplay programs will be changed daily. Six acts of vaudeville will be offered, changed bi-weekly. J. N. Carr, who has been in charge of this house since its opening, is to leave, in order to manage a house at Jamaica, R. I. The assistant manager of Fox. Theater, at Waterbury, Conn., has been selected to succeed Mr. Carr. It is believed by Mr. Fox that the house will be more profitable under the new policy.

Manager T. L. Knight, of the Bijou Theater, Springfield, Mass., is more than enthusiastic over the business he did this week with "The Last Days of Pompeii."

The work on the new Brant Theater, Brantford, Can., is being pushed ahead as fast as possible, as the owners are particularly anxious to open very shortly. Photoplays are to be the main attraction at the Brant.

Kinemacolor came into its own, when S. Z. Poli decided to install the "natural colors" service in his houses at New Haven, Conn., and Worcester, Mass., Hartford, Conn., and Springfield, Mass. This is a strong talking point in favor of Kinemacolor, as Mr. Poli had always opposed what he terms "pictorial vaudeville," but the sheer merit of some of the Kinemacolor stunts turned the trick.

Gardner, Mass., has, of late, been in throes of the question of Sunday night shows. As a result of the recent agitation and discussions, the selectmen of Gardner have decided, by vote, not to issue any more licenses to the two Gardner houses that have been offering Sunday night photoplay programs. Several petitions were circulated and signed protesting against the granting of licenses, and presented to the selectmen. On the other hand, many petitions were signed by people desiring these Sunday night shows to continue.

The Pilgrim Theater, Provincetown, Mass., has installed a new Simplex machine. Manager Kinny, of the Pilgrim, has resigned, but the house will continue to feature the Universal program.

"The Black 107," a Ruby feature, was grabbed by Mr. Sam Grand, of the Novelty Feature Films, Boston. On Monday and Tuesday, December 8 and 9, this feature was exhibited at the Star Theater, Boston.

Messrs. Grant & Campbell, New England Managers of Warner's Features, were on the jump this week, moving to their greatly enlarged quarters on Pleasant street, Boston. The new location is convenient and exactly adapted to the requirements of the Warner three-a-week program.

"The Fall of Constantinople," a three-reel, hand-colored feature, produced by Gaumont, is making a decided impression in this territory, where it is handled by the Echo Feature Film Company, of 835 Broadway, New York City.

The St. James and Orpheum theaters, the two Marcus Loew houses in Boston, under the general supervision of Mr. Victor Morris, continue to do a capacity business. The St. James, in the residential district, plays to absolute capacity every night, but the afternoon business is rather light, even though prices are materially reduced to force matinee business.

Moxley Blumenberg, of the Portland Theater, Portland, Me., writes that he intends to cover the entire city with the 24 sheet posters offered to all Universal exhibitors, free by the Universal's Boston office.

HENRY.

MISSOURI.

EXHIBITORS of Kansas City are swinging into a good-sized holiday business after suffering from the interference of the elements. About ten days of rain cut in substantially on receipts and the members of the profession were in rather pessimistic moods for a time. The weather took a sudden change, however, and is now crisp and clear. Residents of Kansas City have become accustomed to the cold days and volume of business is now comparing favorably to that of a year ago.

Paul Englers, for the past three years assistant manager of the Kansas City branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been made manager of that office, following the departure of C. C. Ezell for a Southern city, where he will continue exchange work. It is believed that the appointment of Mr. Englers will mean an end to the numerous shifts which have been made in the Mutual branch. The new manager has learned the Mutual policy thoroughly and is expected to score a big success in his more responsible role.

The difficulty which existed for some time between the Standard Amusement Company and the union has been amicably adjusted and all is now serene in moving picture circles of Kansas City. Operators employed by the Standard were allowed to join the union at the regular scale. It is said that the union men had raised the rate for the particular benefit of Standard operators. The latter, however, were finally given the usual figure, and affiliated with the union. The Standard operates three theaters, the Twelfth street, Tenth street and Palace, all in the business district. The adjustment of the strike was a welcome development in all quarters. The activity of the union men in picketing the theaters did no one good and probably caused a good deal of harm. The union folk, however, are in good spirits over the ending of the affair, as are exhibitors who watched the disagreement with some concern.

R. H. Henrice has been put in charge of the Foto-Player, recently purchased by the Standard Amusement Company for the Twelfth street theater, and is causing favorable comment by his manipulation of the big instrument. The peculiar part about Henrice's work is that he doesn't know one note from another, according to officers of the Standard. However, he is doing remarkable work in playing to pictures and is bringing patrons of the Twelfth street house back for more. Ernest Jores, another adept on the organ, has been placed in charge of the musical part of the program at the Tenth street house, also conducted by the Standard.

The Lewis Theater, of Independence, Mo., conducted by E. H. Lewis, is now using Mutual service, due, according to Manager Englers, of the Mutual branch, to the patronage commanded by the Mutual advertising campaign.

The Princess Theater, one of the old "legitimate" houses at Joplin, Mo., but which recently has run motion pictures, has been closed down, according to advices received in Kansas City. A. O. Meade was manager of the Princess. Its failure was due, it is said, to the fact that Joplin boasts several animated picture theaters with seating capacities of 1,000. The Electric and Ideal are two big motion picture houses which boast modern conveniences, and which are playing to throngs daily.

Sanitary officials of Kansas City, who recently inspected all of the moving picture houses, gave exhibitors clean bills of health in most instances. The chief trouble, it was announced, was found in theaters which had originally been designed for storerooms. This class of structures had rarely been provided with proper ventilation. The more modern theaters, erected to serve as such, were found to be up to all requirements. Exhibitors who were notified of changes which would improve their theaters, have adopted the suggestions willingly, it was stated, and are working in harmony with the officials.

E. H. Wiley, president of the Kansas City branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and secretary of the National organization, has left Kansas City for a long Western trip. Mr. Wiley will attend several conventions during his absence, being scheduled to speak at the Oregon State meeting. The secretary will devote most of his time to organization work in the future, his house, the World, in Kansas City, being on the market. It is located at Eighth and Highland, and is one of the most prosperous in the residential districts of Kansas City.

O. H. Buckley is the new owner of the Cosy Theater, Eighteenth and Quindare, Kansas City, Kansas. F. J. Bailey has sold the theater and will retire from the moving picture business temporarily.

Julius Rath, who is well known to most of the exhibitors in the country, was a recent visitor in Kansas City, holding forth at one or two of the moving picture theaters here. Mr. Rath, who has walked so many miles that Mr. Weston has nothing on him, had a rather difficult time in convincing local exhibitors that he was a bona fide wanderer. One moving picture man even went so far as to hint that Rath needed a bath. Regardless of that phase of the situation, the fact remains that Rath's story proved interesting to the patrons of the theaters where he lectured, and he left Kansas City with a larger exchequer.

The Boyd Theater, at Omaha, Neb., has passed into the hands of L. M. Crawford, of Topeka, Kan., and will be converted into a vaudeville and moving picture theater. Mr. Crawford owns a string of theaters in the West and is said to have a longing eye fixed on Kansas City. He has a large amount of money and an equally extensive piece of nerve, according to exhibitors, and may yet enter the moving picture business on a mammoth scale.

Kinemacolor gradually is extending its territory. The Iris Theater, of Topeka, Kan., is the latest to show Kinemacolor, having secured the exclusive rights for that territory.

When the Gordon Brothers, operating the Orpheum Theater, at Topeka, Kan., decided to give their patrons more moving pictures and less vaudeville, they encountered some labor trouble which almost broke up their new plans. The change would have meant one man less in the loft, and one more in the booth. The International Alliance of Stage Employes failed to take a fancy to this idea and went on record to that effect. The disagreement was finally settled, however, and the change went into effect. But two vaudeville acts are now being used at the Orpheum, animated pictures making up the remainder of the program.

Another woman exhibitor has entered the field at Topeka, Kas. Mrs. A. B. Carson purchased the Imp Theater recently, Glenn Wagner retiring.

The Iris Theater, of Topeka, treated members of the Boys' Club, of that city to a free show recently. Arthur Capper, a newspaper man, intended to stand the expense, but A. L. Montgomery, owner of the Iris, branded his money as being counterfeit."

IN THE NORTHWEST.

AN order has been issued by R. H. Ober, superintendent of buildings in Seattle, Wash., that entrances to picture shows must be clear of all easels and organs that will in any way interfere with a free use of space, either entering or leaving the theaters. The owners went to the board of appeals about it. Meanwhile the order is in force.

Saxe Brothers have taken out a permit in Minneapolis, Minn., to erect a one-story brick, steel and reinforced concrete moving picture theater at 36-38 Seventh street, S. It will cost $50,000.

The Empress Theater, at Pueblo, Col., has begun its moving picture career as the Princess. G. H. Greaves is manager.

Kern's Theater, at Bellingham, Wash., has been remodelled. The installation of a balcony has increased the seating capacity of this popular photoplay house.

The new theater, at Aitkin, Minn., has been named the Moveum. The name was selected in a prize contest.

FRED WHITMER, who has been connected with the Vaudette Theater and the enterprises of the Vaudette Amusement Company from the time this concern began to be conspicuous in Illinois photoplay circles, has resigned his position as manager of the Fifth street house to devote his time to the business of the Central Film Company, of which he is the head. Mr. Soucia, who has been organist, is looking after affairs at the Vaudette, with the management in the hands of President W. W. Watts. The Central Company is keeping its features well booked up. Earl Enos and D. Davis have been on the road for the concern recently, in addition to the field work done by Manager Whitmer.

L. P. Anderson, of this city, who is operating the Majestic Theater, at Lincoln, has added Jones, Linick & Schafer vaudeville to his pictures.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

VITAGRAPH.

A CHRISTMAS STORY (Dec. 22).—Though her father forbids her to marry Jack Harvey, a poor young artist, Molly Wilson becomes his wife and goes away with him to another town. Bessie, the eldest daughter, an attractive widow with two baby boys and a tiny girl, pleads with her father in Molly's behalf, but he is obdurate.

Two years elapse. It is Christmas time. Bessie surprises her father kissing a photograph of Molly and she writes to her sister to come home for Christmas, saying, "I believe father would be glad to see you." Jack Harvey, in his garret studio, shares Molly's happiness over the letter. They leave almost immediately, taking their little baby with them. At a certain point they have to change trains and buy new tickets. Jack discovers that he has lost his wallet, so he and Molly strike out bravely along the lonely snow-covered road through the winter-bleak country, cheered on by the hope of a kind reception ahead.

At the Wilson home the Christmas tree is decorated and many toys are heaped about the room. Upstairs, Bessie puts her little children to bed and tells them the story of "Christ at the Manger." She is sad because she does not expect to see her sister this Christmas.

It is very late when Jack and Molly, exhausted, come to the town and seek admittance at the Inn. All of the rooms are taken and they cannot get accommodations, so they go on to the Wilson home. Seeing all dark within, they decide to spend the night in the barn, sleeping on the hay. Early the next morning, the little children sneak out to the barn to see if Christ is there. They find Molly and Jack and the baby. They tiptoe out and returning to the house, load themselves down with toys from the Christmas tree and go back to the barn. Bessie with her father discovers the absence of the children and tracks them to the barn. The father tries to be stern with his daughter, but he forgives her when Jack shows him their little baby. A merry time around the Christmas tree reunites the family in love and happiness.

HER FAITH IN THE FLAG (Dec. 23).—Candida Bettini, an Italian immigrant, with her old mother and baby daughter, arrives in America. Not knowing English, she attends night school, where she is taught to reverence the American flag and is told that while she is under its protection no harm can befall her. As an object lesson, all the scholars are given a small American flag.

When her baby becomes ill and the doctor tells her its life cannot be saved, she remembers the teacher's words about the flag. She tries to spread the one she owns over the baby, but finds that it is too small. She decides a larger one must be obtained. While passing the house of Dr. Strong, a child specialist, she sees a large American flag. She takes it from the pole and runs home with it. Her act is seen by a newsboy, who informs a policeman. They follow her. Candida reaches home and has just time to cover her baby with the flag when the policeman arrives and arrests her. She pleads for mercy to no avail and is taken to the police station.

Meanwhile Dr. Strong has missed his flag, and on the way to see a patient calls at the police station to report his loss. He arrives just as the sergeant has ordered Candida to be locked up. A general explanation ensues and the doctor decides to go to her house and see if she is speaking the truth. On arrival, he finds the sick baby covered with the flag. Removing it, the doctor believes the baby can be saved by prompt attention. He administers a restorative and the baby recovers consciousness and coos to its mother. The doctor deeply impressed withdraws the charge against Candida and gives her the flag as a reward for her faith in Old Glory.

THE HONORABLE ALGERNON (Dec. 24).—The Hon. Algernon, a younger son, comes to America to make his fortune. Instead of doing it, however, he gets left high and dry in New York. He is a decent chap with a university education, but with no idea of how to use it. He writes to his fiancee in England, telling her of his troubles and releasing her from her engagement. He then pawns two athletic medals which he won at Oxford, the last thing of value he has. Strolling down the street, he sees a sign advertising for a waiter in a small restaurant and he applies for the place. Mrs. Potter, the proprietress, takes rather a fancy to him because he is so polite, but Blinkers, her head man, is jealous and does his best to make his life miserable. Poor Algernon has all sorts of mishaps. To save himself he goes to his attic room to bemoan his lot. Mrs. Potter discovers through the address on one of his letters that he is an Honorable, and finding on inquiry that it is true, she scents a romance and starts out to win him. Algernon cannot make out what it all means. She invites him to supper after the day's work is over, and takes him down to the beach on Sundays. Algernon is grateful for her kindness, but made very uncomfortable by it. Blinkers is consumed with jealousy and plans revenge.

Algernon gets a letter from his fiancee, telling him their troubles are at an end, as she has inherited a fortune and is coming to America. Just then he is summoned to the parlor and Mrs. Potter frankly makes him a Leap-Year proposal and offers to share the profits of the restaurant with him. Algernon declines and tells her he is engaged, whereupon Mrs. Potter gets hysterical. Blinkers rushes into the room and though triumphant at the turn things have taken, generously offers to revenge his mistress's injuries and thrash Algernon. He tries to do it, but gets a good beating for his pains. Angela arrives in the midst of this scene. Algernon introduces her to Mrs. Potter and thanking her for all her kindness, leaves. Mrs. Potter resolves to console herself in the discomfited Blinkers.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS (Dec. 25).—The day before Christmas, little Nell and Bess, and brother Tom, in their squalid tenement room, give all their pennies to Anne, their eighteen-year-old sister, to buy Christmas presents for them. Anne looks at them with a sad little smile as she allows the few savings to trickle through her fingers on to the table. The father of the family, a middle-aged man, out of employment, comes home and shares the meagre supper.

With Jane, her chum, Anne goes back to the department store in the evening to work. Anne carelessly leaves her small purse on the leather-goods' counter where she is employed and it is stolen. Mrs. Vandeveer, a wealthy customer, drops a bank bill unnoticed, which Anne later discovers and resolved to keep it to buy toys. She goes to the cloak room where, instead of placing it in the pocket of her own coat, she by mistake conceals it in the pocket of Jane's. Mrs. Vanderveer discovers her loss and notifies the floorwalker. That night at the store, Jane finds the money. Jane is taken into custody. Anne dares not confess. She wanders out alone into the snow-swept night. She gets Mrs. Vandeveer's address and slips into her house with a group of gaily dressed men and women arriving for the Christmas Eve ball. The brilliantly lighted interior dazzles her.

Teddy Vandeveer, home from college, sees Anne and takes her to his mother. Between sobs, Anne tells of the stolen money. Filled with the spirit of Christmas, Teddy goes to the great Christmas tree in the glistening ballroom, where he and the guests strip it of its toys. With Anne they all go to the police station and release Jane; journeying then to Anne's home they fill the little stockings with toys and pile high the room with gifts so that a day of wonder greets the enraptured youngsters on Christmas morn.

THE GOLF GAME AND THE BONNET (Dec. 26).—John is commanded to return home immediately after office hours to help his wife beat the rugs, but it is Saturday and his friend Smith won't take his refusal to go to the country club for a game of golf. John tries to make excuses, but Smith is reinforced with several friends, who pile John into their car and rush him off to the links. John is a novice at the game and loses more than his golf balls on the course, but the few times he hits the elusive pellet, fill him so with pride that he soon forgets all about wifey in the whirl of the play. He is sore grieved, however, when he gets a black eye from a flying ball. Besides the discomfort it causes him, he fears that he will get an awful upbraiding when his wife sees his eye.

Smith comforts him as best he can and on the way home induces John to buy a new bonnet for his wife. He purchases the bonnet, but realizes that even it will not make his wife believe whatever he tells her. When he and Smith reach John's domicile, they sneak toward the back entrance and there find John's wife out in the back yard beating the rug. Smith, the ingenious, has an idea. John gleefully admits that it is a fine one. He sneaks in back of the rug, and just as his wife gives the rug a vicious swat, John gives a howl of pain and starts to run toward the house. His wife stops him. He shows her the hat and says, "I bought you the hat. I had to wait until they put clean trimmings on it, then you black my eye!"

She makes many apologies for her accidental strike and takes John indoors, where she has the maid bring him cigars and his slippers and fixes him up comfortably in a large armchair. John smiles covertly as he realizes the brilliancy of Smith's scheme.

HEARTSEASE (Special—2 parts—Dec. 27).—A beauty-loving French girl marries a wealthy Englishman and goes to his home to live. In her new life she finds herself misunderstood. Philip, her 'husband, is more interested in hunting and riding than in flowers or beauty.' Mary feels stifled by the severity of her husband's manners. The sternness of his stately baronial home chills her. She realizes that Philip loves her and she tries to conceal her unhappiness. To remind herself of her childhood home in southern France she sends for a box of "Heartsease" and plants them in a bed directly beneath her window. Ten years elapse. Mary is the mother of two sons: the elder, a conventional English boy, the younger, reflecting the nature of his mother. Philip considers the younger boy a milksop and devotes himself entirely to the elder boy, training him to shoot and ride and become proficient in English sports.

Mary dies, crushed by the coldness of her husband. Upon her breast the younger boy tremblingly places a little bunch of Heartsease. The dearest possession he now has is her portrait. Every night after the great mansion is in darkness, he steals from his room down the long corridor to the room in which her portrait hangs, and kneels before it adoringly. A terrific electric storm breaks over the estate. It would seem as though the heavens were risen in revolt. The younger son sits up in bed, muffling his ears with his hands and looking with awed eyes at the flashes of lightning that split the darkness without. The house catches fire. Flames leap from its great windows; dense smoke fills its corridors. The father rescues both boys. The younger son fights his way back to get the portrait of his mother. He gains the open air again with the portrait, but falls face downward upon the bed of Heartsease and dies from the effects of the smoke. Too late, the father realizes the pathos and bravery of the boy's life.

EDISON.

PRODUCTS OF THE PALM—THE BANANA AND COCOANUT INDUSTRIES, JAMAICA, WEST INDIES (Dec. 22).—The scenes among the banana palms of the beautiful island of Jamaica are singularly picturesque. A powerful negro armed with a long knife or "machete" passes quickly through the grove lopping off the fronds with their heavy bunches of banans. After him come a motley assembly of men and women who pick up the great bunches and bear them off. The bunches of bananas are wrapped in straw and loaded on ox teams for transportation to Port Antonio. The entire process from picking the bananas to loading them on the ships at Port Antonio is shown.

The most interesting single feature of the cocoanut picking is the inhuman way in which the negro boys walk up the palms with no other aid than bare hands and feet. Arrived at the top, they use their feet in an extremely dexterous manner to detach the thickly clustered cocoanuts. The fallen nuts are robbed of their thick outer shell by the sharp machete, and the picture closes with a kindly old scallywag of a negro taking a drink of that famous beverage of the tropics, cocoanut milk.

TEACHING HIS WIFE A LESSON (Dec. 22).—Mrs. Dodd and Mrs. Charters were neighbors. The principal reason that they did not love each other as themselves was largely on account of dress. Mrs. Dodd, a person of somewhat striking tastes in the matter of clothes, held it as a perpetual grudge against Mrs. Charters that the latter copied all her carefully thought out effects in the most barefaced manner.

Mr. Dodd was a serious person of practical instincts. One morning, just before his wife started downtown, he took occasion to warn her against the careless way in which she was in the habit of carrying her pocketbook. Mrs. Dodd, boiling with indignation over the latest effrontery on the part of Mrs. Charters, paid little attention to her earnest husband and sallied off on a shopping tour.

Later in the day, Mr. Dodd, seeing a person to all appearances his wife, carrying her pocketbook in the same slipshod manner, determined to teach her a needed lesson. Stealing behind the hurrying lady, he deftly snatched the pocketbook from its insecure position. Mr. Dodd did not notice that the spot he chose for his crime was directly in front of a postcard camera, nor did he know that the camera had been accidentally exposed at the very moment that he took the pocketbook. That evening Mr. Dodd arrived at home chuckling his merriment. He asked his wife for the theater tickets he had asked her to buy that morning. She replied that they were in her pocketbook, and when Mr. Dodd asked to see them, went out and brought her pocketbook to him. Mr. Dodd's horror may be imagined. A hasty examination of the contents of the pocketbook showed him that he had robbed somebody of three hundred dollars. He dared not tell his wife and went to the theater with her in an extremely anguished frame of mind. His worst fears were realized by a glimpse at the first page of an evening paper. Under the glaring headlines, "DARING THIEF CAUGHT BY POST-CARD CAMERA" was an unmistakable photograph of Mr. Dodd stealing the pocketbook.

On his return from the theater Mr. Dodd was arrested and dragged off to the station house. His feverish explanation did not carry much weight with the skeptical sergeant, and the unfortunate man was only cleared when two furious ladies were made to confront the sergeant in their strikingly similar suits.

THE UPWARD WAY (Dec. 23).—Joe was a convict. Because his mother was dying and because the long strike had robbed him of the little he had saved, Joe stole food. The food came too late to save his mother. She died and he went to prison. When he had served his term he came out of prison with a firm resolution that his life thenceforward should be above reproach. But unfortunately, the way is not easy for an ex-convict. Once he lost his chance to get work because a policeman recognized him and once again because he was accosted by one of his jail companions.

At last, when there seemed to be nothing before

Canadian Representatives, International Feature Film Corporation, Ltd., Montreal, Canada him but death or a relapse into crime. Providence sent him to the gate of a minister in a country town. The minister was a kind man and gladly gave the sad-faced wanderer a helping hand without questioning him about his antecedents. By hard, faithful work Joe succeeded in raising himself from the place of a mere recipient of charity to a position as the minister's private secretary. Moreover he gradually won his way into the heart of the minister's only daughter.

One day a man called upon the minister, whom the horrified Joe recognized as his former cellmate. The man, Bill Haskell, had interested the minister in some worthless mining property and the simple-hearted minister was on the point of signing the papers. Haskell and his sister met Joe outside the town. The man warned him to keep silent if he did not wish his past life to be exposed. Joe pleaded with him, but Haskell, despite the intercession of his sister on Joe's behalf, remained obdurate. Unknown to any of them the minister's daughter had overheard the conversation between the two criminals and her lover. She was shocked at the disclosure of his past life and her heart bled for him in his present difficulty and temptation.

On that same afternoon the minister's daughter stood in her father's study and watched Joe fighting his silent battle as Haskell prepared the papers for the minister's signature Joe won his fight, denounced the swindler, told the story of his past life and turned sadly away; but the minister's daughter ran after him, and when he turned and saw the light in her face he knew that all the clouds and doubt lay behind him forever.

MARY'S NEW HAT (Dec. 24).—The trouble started when Mary saw a hat in a store window and asked her husband to buy it for her. It was highly expensive. Mary's husband attempted to convince her that she did not need another hat. One word soon led to another, until at last Mary declared that she wouldn't stay with such a mean nasty old brute for another moment. Her poor darling old papa was sitting quietly on the front porch when Mary arrived Poor darling old papa was uncannily wise in the ways of women, and when Mary breathed forth the woeful story of her husband's cruelty, the outraged father-in-law started from his chair with dire threats of vengeance.

When Mary's father arrived at his son-in-law's residence, his attitude had suffered a curious transformation As we have said, he was uncannily wise in the ways of women. Hence his sympathies were entirely with Mary's husband. Instead of subduing the rebellious son-in-law with harsh words and blows, he shook hands with him, and extended his heartiest sympathy. That Mary might have no cause to complain, the husband procured a small can of paint, and manufactured a highly realistic black eye for himself.

When Mary arrived, she found the men engaged in apparently mortal combat. With entire femininity, she told her father that he was a brute to treat her poor old darling hubby that way, and mopped the latter's poor battered eye with her handkerchief. Then Mary retired to the house, wiping the tears from her face with the same handkerchief. Unfortunately, the husband had not painted his eye with indelible paint, and a casual glance in a mirror exposed the whole villainous plot to Mary.

Mary was an eminently clever young woman. Instead of wasting time on tears and reproaches, she hurried to her friend the constable and had both men arrested for disorderly conduct. The men attempted to bribe the constable, and the constable gave the money to Mary. The last scene, in which Mary arrayed in her new hat, appears before the two men, gives us the final laugh in this very amusing picture.

THE JANITOR'S QUIET LIFE (Dec. 24).—The janitor prided himself on the conservative atmosphere of respectability that pervaded the apartment house over which he presided. He was a beneficent despot. The conservative atmosphere of respectability was rudely shattered one afternoon by a band of boys and goats, who invaded the street before the apartment house. The outraged janitor rushed forth, and bade them seek other regions for their riotous play. Naturally enough, the proud bearing of the janitor irritated the free and independent spirits of the boys, and it was largely on his account that they decided to have a circus in one of the vacant apartments. Accordingly, they quietly led their interesting pets up the stairs and installed them in the parlor of a vacant flat. They came up as cautiously and secretly as so many ghosts, and started their circus with lowered voices and hushed footfalls, but in the growing excitement of the game their early caution soon deserted them. To the people in the apartment directly beneath there came gradually the sound of shrill voices and the stamp of hoofed feet. They listened in growing bewilderment to the strange and unwonted noise, and then arose and sought their faithful janitor. The janitor assured them that they must be mistaken. Noise in his apartment house was an absurd supposition. At length, when they grew insistent, he accompanied them upstairs, only to find a complete and awful silence. The boys, warned in time, had retreated to a more remote portion of the apartment.

Shortly after the janitor left, however, the noise broke out again with redoubled vigor. This time other tenants heard it and the janitor was besieged by a clamoring horde who whispered darkly that the house must be haunted. Eager to wipe out this calumny on his beloved domain, the janitor resolved to make a thorough search. Room after room of the apartment was searched in vain. At length before the last door, the janitor stooped to examine an unexplained wisp of hay. As he stooped, the door opened cautiously, and an enraged goat appeared. The rest is too painful.

A TUDOR PRINCESS (Special—2 parts—Dec. 26).—Mary Tudor was an extremely attractive and lively young lady. Henry VIII, her brother, was engaged in the delicate task of restoring England to the place from which she had fallen during the terrible Wars of the Roses. To give the newborn House of Tudor prestige among the kings of Europe, matches with the important houses must be made.

Henry wanted Mary to marry a certain Charles of Austria, who in addition to being head of the Holy Roman Empire, owned most of Europe as well. But Mary did not want to marry Charles. She wanted to marry Charles Brandon, the young duke of Suffolk. Henry raged and fumed, and was on the point of forcing his rebellious sister to obey, when a sudden shifting in international affairs brought a hasty offer from King Louis XII for the hand of the Princess Mary. Louis XII was old and had, and when Mary learned that her royal brother's mind was set on this new and important match, she decided to forget she was a princess. So she ran away with the man she loved. But they did not get very far. Henry sent guards after them and brought them back. He was in one of his most dangerous moods, and when Mary openly defied him, commanded that Brandon should be instantly beheaded. To save her lover's life, Mary at last consented to marry the old king of France. So they sent her over to France, and there the beautiful girl was married to a man almost old enough to be her grandfather. Charles Brandon followed her to France, and gaining admission to her salon, begged the young queen to fly with him. While he was in the midst of his fervid entreaty, King Louis entered. Brandon was seized and cast into a dungeon to await his execution.

But before the sentence could be carried out, King Louis died, and the throne passed to his nephew, Francis of Angouleme. Partly because he hated Henry VIII and partly because of Mary's persuasive ways, Francis agreed to liberate Brandon from captivity. Mary returned to her brother's court, where she was shortly afterward joined by Brandon. The princess bided her time, and waited until Henry was in a good humor. Then she asked him if he wouldn't let her marry Brandon, and the mollified king at last consented.

A PROPOSAL FROM MARY (Sixth of Who Will Marry Mary?—Dec. 27).—When Captain Justin Bradford left the vicinity of the Silver Star Mine, he caused considerable displeasure to no less a person than Miss Mary Cuyler, now firmly established in possession of the mine. Mary had come West at the urgent appeal of her agent, who assured her that her property was in grave danger from persons unnamed, who claimed that they had the rightful deeds to the land. The first person Mary met after she had left the little station on her ride to the property was her old friend, Captain Bradford. He seemed greatly surprised to learn that Mary was the owner of the mine. The next morning he left town and Mary was told that the suit had been mysteriously withdrawn. Since there was nothing else to hold her in the West, Mary decided to return to New York. Despite the advice of her manager, she insisted on riding over to the train alone. As a result she lost her way, and when her horse ran away and left her shortly afterwards, found herself alone and helpless, in the midst of a deserted wilderness.

After several hours of frightened wandering through the woods, she at length emerged on a great plain. To her astonished delight, Captain Bradford dropped unexpectedly out of the sky in an aeroplane. Mary explained her situation, and thankfully accepted the captain's offer to take her to the train. While Bradford was busied about the motor, Mary picked up a small diary which the captain had dropped. A picture of herself fell out of the book, and when the blushing Mary opened the book to put it back, her eyes fell full upon an entry in the diary, which revealed the true reason of Bradford's strange actions. He was the actual owner of the Silver Star Mine!

Mary said nothing to Bradford about the diary. She left him at the platform with a mere word of thanks, only making him promise to come to a reception at the Reeds in New York on December 27. Bradford came to the reception, wondering. By the time he arrived Mary had made up her mind. She had found the one man to whom her money meant nothing. And so Mary, long sought by dukes and dons of proud name, knelt humbly down before the man she loved and asked him to marry her.

LUBIN.

THROUGH FLAMING PATHS (Dec. 22).—Clara Roland is the daughter of the president of a company owning mines and electric railways which run through a heavily forested region. Suitors to Clara are Ralph Gresham, superintendent of the company, and Basil Conrad, a young engineer. Basil incurs Gresham's dislike by protesting against the storing of powder intended for the mines in a wooden freight house located in the forest and the lack of precautions against forest fires. When it appears that Clara favors Basil, Gresham resorts to underhand means to throw upon Basil strong suspicion of crime and he is discharged.

Basil is forced to find employment as a laborer in a lumber camp in the hills. With his rival removed Gresham now has high hopes of winning Clara. The very carelessness against which Basil vainly protested at length causes a forest fire which is soon beyond control, and which places in great danger a number of settlers in the lumber camps, whose only hope for escape is by means of the electric line, along which the fire is already burning. No man will make the desperate attempt to rescue the imperiled settlers. However, Clara determines to do so, and she seizes a car and dashes into the fire zone.

Meanwhile, Basil has succeeded in gathering at a point on the line all the settlers, trusting that a rescue train would come. Clara finally succeeds in reaching this point. Gresham, shamed by the girl's superior courage and frantic at the thought of her peril, follows as fast as he dares. By desperate efforts, Clara and Basil have brought their car to a point almost alongside the freight house where the powder is stored when the current suddenly fails and the car stops; the feed wire has broken near where Gresham is standing. The freight shed is now on fire, and Gresham realizes it is a matter only of moments before it will blow up. It is impossible for the people on the car to escape on foot, their only chance being to rush through the fire. Gresham determines to save Clara and the others from the results of his own acts, and with his bare hands seizes the ends of the broken feed wire. The car leaps forward, dashes through the fire, and all are saved. A moment later the powder house explodes. Gresham has died at the first shock of the powerful current, but the magnetism has welded his hands to the wires and kept the circuit closed. Examination of the documents in Gresham's office proves Basil's innocence of the charges against him and the lovers are happily united.

A COLLEGE CUPID (Dec. 23).—Hopson, a young college man to qualify for membership in the Delta Kappa Sigma, must give the college a laugh. He inserts an ad in a matrimonial paper for a wife and gets a few hundred answers. With the help of the boys, each letter is answered and the applicant is requested to meet the writer the following afternoon. At the appointed hour the college turns out to see the fun. The park is thick with the fortune seekers. An officer attempts to dispel the crowd, but is beaten and chased. He calls out the reserves. The boys throw Hopson in among the women; each one makes a grab for him. He pulls himself away and dashes off, followed by the girls. The reserves get on the trail and arrive just in time to stop the girls from jumping over the college wall after the boy. The cops then chase the girls away. The following day Hopson is prepared for the third degree; he is blindfolded and dragged to the initiation room. One of the boys is disguised as an old maid, another as a minister. Hopson feels a hand placed in his, and the minister's voice saying I now pronounce you man and wife. Hopson tears off the bandage, takes one look at the minister and the old maid and thinks the marriage is "on the level;" he throws the crowd aside and dashes out, followed by the boys. He is quickly overtaken, the crowd unmask, the old maid pulls off the wig. Hopson realizes the laugh is on him and he has passed the third degree.

THE PARASITE (Special—3 parts—Dec. 25).—Howard Lynn and his wife, Lottie, are typical parasites and blackmailers. They select as their next victim John Wellington, a rich society man, who is about to announce his engagement to Florence Randall. Lottie meets John and plays her cards so well that he is soon deeply infatuated with her and his engagement to Miss Randall is broken. The innocence, culture and wealth that the other woman so well simulates has its rapid effect upon John and he begs her to marry him. After a consultation with her husband she agrees upon condition that they live as husband and wife in name only. Wellington, sure that he can eventually make her love him, agrees and they go through a mock marriage, in which Howard officiates. After the marriage Lottie starts in to gradually and effectively fleece Wellington, the money thus secured going to Howard. Later Howard insists that she is not getting enough money from Wellington and at the same time Wellington tells her it is time they settle down and have a family. Her conscience, stifled up to now, gets the better of her and she leaves Wellington and goes back to Howard.

A letter of farewell and her hat and cloak found by the river side convince Wellington that Lottie has committed suicide. Howard realizes Lottie is in love with Wellington and does his best to conquer her feeling, but to little avail. Wellington, in his sorrow, turns to Miss Randall for sympathy and later marries her. Lottie and Howard go from bad to worse until eventually they quarrel and Howard in the ensuing struggle plunges down the stairs of their home to his death. After Lottie comes out of the hospital the doctor tells her that to touch whiskey again will mean her death. Thinking only of Wellington and not knowing of his subsequent marriage she goes to his home. The meeting is a painful one and Wellington to show her the enormity of his trouble lets her look in upon his wife's bedroom, where she lies asleep with a baby in her arms. Lottie is overcome with emotion and knowing full well the penalty she will have to pay accepts the glass of whiskey from John's hands to steady her. Back at the hospital she writes him a full confession, and, half crazed with the situation confronting him, John phones the hospital to learn definitely that not only was he never married to Lottie, but that she is now at peace.

BETWEEN DANCES (Dec. 23).—Harry and Mabel are sweethearts. They have retired to the seclusion of the conservatory, where Harry tries to make love to Mabel. Mabel thinks that Harry is just a little too sure of her, so she starts to tease him and make him jealous. Frank enters and she makes a tool of him by coquetting, and taking great glee in Harry's rising jealousy and anger. She goes off with Frank for the dance that Harry wanted and upon her return promises Frank more dances, which does not make a great hit with Harry. After Frank leaves, a quarrel between Harry and Mabel ensues, and Harry, angered beyond endurance, strides out of the room.

Mabel is sorry, but won't go after him. Harry goes to the smoking-room and sulks. An elderly friend of Mabel's enters and schemes to win Harry back. He goes to Harry and makes him unburden himself and then asks him to listen to the story of his blighted life. Harry is surprised, but listens and the man tells him an imaginary tale of a quarrel with his sweetheart and how the other man took advantage of the quarrel and eloped with his sweetheart. When he cooled down and went back to her he found them just returned from the ministers and married. As that scene fades back into the smoking-room, Harry shows his great anxiety and nervousness. He is afraid that Frank may be doing the same thing in his absence and cannot get away from the laughing old man quick enough. He enters the conservatory just as Frank is claiming the next dance. Taking no chances, he grabs Mabel and rushes her out onto the dance floor, much to Frank's chagrin and her surprise. She likes Harry's masterful way and later when he gets her into the conservatory and tells her she is going to marry him, it takes her breath away, but she agrees and waves her thanks to the old man as he smiles in at them through the doorway.

THE DEATH TRAP (Dec. 26).—On adjoining farms in California live Nora, a young woman who attends to her own affairs, and Craven, whose farming is a blind for counterfeiting operations. Unsuspected by his neighbors he uses them for the disposal of his illegitimate product. The flooding of the district with counterfeit money attracts the attention of the government and a secret service man is assigned. He traces the flow of the money to a market where Nora and Craven have stands. In making a purchase at Nora's stand Eaton, the detective, receives a counterfeit coin in change and jumps to the conclusion that she is in league with the gang. He disguises himself as a farm hand and applies for work. Just as he arrives at the farm Nora and Craven are engaged in an altercation, due to Craven's attempts to force his attentions on the girl. Eaton frightens Craven away, but the latter naturally takes a strong dislike to the new farm hand who is hired by Nora. Later Eaton finds an opportunity to search Nora's house, but finds no evidence.

Meanwhile, Craven has nursed his grudge and in the course of his shadowing he discovers that the detective occasionally climbs over the high bluffs and changes his clothes, going off in the direction of the town. Craven visits the hiding-place and finds clothes with a detective badge pinned to the vest. Meanwhile, Eaton receives his wages from Nora and sees that the coins are counterfeit. He asks her how she came by the money and she tells him they were given her by Craven in payment of a horse. While Eaton is searching for Craven, the counterfeiter has been originating a diabolical plan to kill the detective in a manner that will leave the slayer with a clear alibi. Realizing that Eaton must pass up through the gorge, Craven sets up his rifle at the top pointing downward and by means of a string attached to the trigger and stretched across the path below, Eaton shall spring it so that he will receive the bullet. Then he starts down the trail, so that he can have witnesses that he was at the farm when the shooting occurred. He meets Nora and again attempts to force his attentions. She enrages him by her resistance and breaking away from him runs into her bedroom and holds the door. Craven follows her.

Meanwhile, Eaton is approaching the death trap. Nora holds the door against her infuriated assailant for a time, but her strength finally leaves her and he bursts the door open and enters the room. Eaton arrives at the point where the fatal string is stretched across the road, but a stone in the path turns his ankle and sends him sprawling. He falls across the string discharging the rifle. The bullet whistles over his head, plunges downward and crashes through the window of the ranch house below. Nora and Craven are struggling and as the bullet enters, it finds its mark, and Craven falls dead. Eaton, on top of the hill, examines the trap, realizes that it was meant for him, hurries down the bluff and finds Nora and her mother in a hysterical condition. Nora and Eaton go back into the room of death and satisfy themselves that Craven has died by his own hand. Nora's joy over Eaton's escape betrays her into an admission which brings complete understanding between the two.

THE DOCTOR'S ROMANCE (Dec. 27).—He is such a busy doctor, so successful that he has time to think of little else beside his patients. All day his office is filled with sufferers seeking the relief, which the great doctor seldom fails to afford. But in time the doctor feels the absence of something. In his big home he finds that he is lonesome. The nurse, his office assistant, one day brings her little son, Bobbie, to the office. She is a young widow. The little fellow steals into the doctor's heart. The doctor's loneliness becomes more poignant. He decides he should marry and have a little Bobbie of his own. He's had so little time to think of such things as love and marriage that he is at a loss how to begin, so he asks the nurse about it. Upon her advice he cultivates society and becomes engaged to a young woman of social standing. Preparations for the wedding go forward. Looking into the future, the doctor still has a vague feeling that his life will still lack something. That something is love, but he doesn't realize it, not for awhile. His fiancee falls in love with another man and the doctor learns of the fact. He gives her her liberty and decides that love is not for him.

But he had overlooked something that proves of importance. A blind man could have seen it, but the doctor didn't, so it becomes up to Bobby. The nurse loves the doctor. One night after she has put Bobbie to bed, she falls asleep crying over a photograph of the doctor. Bobbie awakes. When he sees the photo and the tears on his mother's face he jumps at the conclusion that the doctor has been bad to his mother. He decides he will make him account for it, too. The doctor, alone in his library, answers the telephone's ring and is astonished to hear Bobbie's voice commanding him to come around to the flat right away as he (Bobbie) wants "to see you about sumpin' about my mother an' you better come right away, too." When the doctor reaches the flat Bobbie accuses him of having been "nasty" to his mamma. He knows he has, because every time she looks at the doctor's picture she cries. Bobbie threatens to shoot the doctor. The nurse awakes to find the doctor bending over her; he has seen and knows. Neither Bobbie, his mother nor the doctor will ever be lonesome.

A VAGABOND CUPID (Dec. 23).—Richard Travers, a wealthy clubman, becomes attached to a newsboy street waif, and takes him home to live with him. Anna, Travers' fiancee, thinking he is bestowing his attentions upon someone else, sends him a note returning his ring and telling him that his affections are being given to another party. Little Tim, the waif, plays Cupid and brings the two lovers together again. Tim finds a home, and a mother and father that will watch over him.

AT THE OLD MAID'S CALL (Dec. 24).—Miss Muchmoney and no face, has a strenuous morning with the ice man, milk man and grocery man. She cannot understand why they are not captivated by her charming face or the fact that she is the possessor of $100,000. Applicant number one from a matrimonial bureau calls, but leaves rather hurriedly when in the course of the visit he discovers that her hair is false. Upon the arrival of applicant number two, she locks the door, but JUST PLAIN COMMON SENSE tells you—When you want to SEE yourself you use a Mirror. Because you SEE yourself better with a Mirror than any other means in the world. Now the same thing applies. When you want to SEE motion pictures, use a MIRROR SCREEN. Because you SEE the pictures so much plainer, better and clearer on a Mirror Screen than on any other surface under the sun. Besides it tickles your patrons and makes picture fans. It's a fact. The difference between a motion picture on a MIRROR SCREEN and any other screen of any other kind is the same comparison between seeing your own reflection in a fine French plate glass mirror and in a mud puddle. The "MIRROR SCREEN" is a Mirror. when she sings to him, her voice is so terrible he exits through the window. Is Miss Muchmoney disheartened by her failure to win a husband? By no means. She inserts an "ad" in the newspaper, stating that she will give $5,000 to the man who will marry her before twelve o'clock that day. Laborers, coal men, milk men, porters and tramps swarm in upon her on all kinds of conveyances. She picks out Johnny Fresh, a cute young thing, and marries him, much to the disgust of the others. But when she raises her veil, Johnny makes a bolt for the door, with his bride in hot pursuit. Into the lake Johnny goes, but Mrs. Fresh will not be cheated out of her long-sought-for husband. So she goes after him and "sweet love" is rescued to be preserved and cherished by his bride.

GLIMPSES OF RIO DE JANEIRO (Dec. 24).—A beautiful scenic travelogue, showing glimpses of Rio de Janeiro, the picturesque South American seaport.

THAT PAIR FROM THESPIA (Dec. 25).—Shakespeare the Second and Dan Rice the Third, would-be ham actors, blow into the town of Barnstorm. That afternoon they give a "free" performance, which is indeed terrible. Dan Rice passes the hat, only to receive cat-calls for his trouble. The hotel proprietor orders them to pay their bill and leave town. Without funds, the two plan a road of escape, but are caught and thrown bodily out of the village. The two return in disguise and neatly swindle a few of the residents out of a good amount of cash. The scheme they worked is very clever, as is the picture from start to finish.

A SNAKEVILLE COURTSHIP (Dec. 27).—Jeremiah Green receives a letter from his niece, stating that she is coming West, and is in the market for a husband. The news scatters fast throughout the Western town, and when the fair Sophie arrives, her callers are numerous. One look at the three-hundred-pound debutante is enough to convince the men that they are not eligible for the marriage certificate, especially if Sophie is to be the bride. Many are the humorous incidents brought about by Sophie trying to capture one of the men for a husband, and the way they elude her affords great amusement for the onlooker.

THE GREAT GAME (Special—2 parts—Dec. 26).—Austin Cluett has just been elected Mayor. At the same time, Harvey Pelham, railroad king, in company of the railroad trust, is trying to get a new franchise from the city, for the purpose of allowing them to run their tracks into the center of the city. To assist in their operations, Jim Hennessy, a politician, to whom Cluett largely owes his office, is called in and offered a bribe of $10,000 if he can induce Cluett to sign the franchise. If necessary, Hennessy is to offer the Mayor a bribe of $100,000 for his signature. When approached by Hennessy with the franchise, which he has seen before, the Mayor turns the proposition down, once and for all, saying that he is not a machine man.

Pelham, at a loss which way to turn, resorts to personal ingenuity, and turns to his son Jack for help. Jack, a clever young man, and a broker of some note, tells his father that before election to office, Cluett dabbled heavily in stocks. This opens a new train of thought in Pelham's mind, and he orders his son to buy up all of a certain stock in order to corner the market and break the Mayor financially. The $100,000 bribe would then be acceptable to him and the franchise would go through. Meantime Pelham attends a ball and there meets Mrs. Cluett, a young and charming woman. Being a man of strong and ungovernable passions, Pelham is at once attracted and subsequently falls in love with her. He is now more determined than ever to ruin her husband and begins the great game. Perfect love exists between the Mayor and his wife, and when she once learns Pelham's intentions, she spurns his advances. As time passes, the Mayor is finally wiped out and his office is tottering as well—Pelham seemingly with his hand at his destiny.

Jack Pelham suddenly realizes that for some reason a good man is being ruined, and not always being in accord with his father's methods of success, begins a battle in the stock market of son against father. Knowing that her husband is ruined, Jack goes to Mrs. Cluett and asks her if it is possible for her to buy all of a certain stock which he is able to throw in her way. She confesses lack of funds, and refusing his offer of a loan, pledges her jewelry. With this money, Jack begins to turn the market on his father, and Pelham, enraged and wondering at the source, begins to lose heavily. Jack is able to recoup the $200,000 for Mrs. Cluett and gives her the securities. Just at this point, Pelham knowing her husband is ruined, writes Mrs. Cluett a short note, telling her of the fact and assuring her that her only refuge lies in him—Pelham. In shame and indignation she shows Jack his father's note. This part of the game was, until now, new to Jack, but he is now able to see through it all. Comforting the young wife, whom he has also grown to more than admire, he lays his father's note on the library desk, and just as he starts from the room, Cluett enters, noticing, as he thinks, an affectionate relationship between Jack and his wife. He finds the letter and his suspicions are confirmed. Pelham, Sr., enters—son and father. An explanation is brought about and the Mayor thanks the son for saving him from destruction. The machine fails.

GEORGE KLEINE.

WHEN A WOMAN WILLS (Cines—2 parts—Special—Dec. 30).—Jane Pierce, a charming widow, is bequeathed a fortune at the death of her husband. By the terms of the will, this fortune reverts to her cousin, Daniel Sage, unless she marries a man possessing at least $2,000,000. Harry Osborn, in order to obtain the help of the International Sporting Club, agrees to pay it one-half of any inheritance derived from his marriage through its aid. Later Jane leaves for Europe and Sage, resolving to increase his fortune, follows the widow. He meets with Osborn through the Sporting Club and they perpetrate a scheme whereby they both will benefit financially.

In Paris, Jane meets an amiable and careless Italian, who losing everything at a wheel of fortune, is induced to buy a couple of lottery tickets. Things begin to look favorable to Sage and Osborn, until Jane meets Petro. She immediately falls in love with him, but her too frequent attentions are responsible for his indifference toward her. All the while she refuses numerous invitations from the schemers. While out riding Petro meets Jane along the roadside and she accuses him of having followed her. Having no visiting cards, he writes his answer on a lottery ticket, informing her that her mind might be at rest as he leaves for Rome the next day. Jane has planned to leave for Rome and they incidentally arrive on the same train.

Sage and Osborn not to be thwarted, follow them to Rome and procure the assistance of the International Sporting Club there. Osborn seizes an opportunity to steal Jane's purse containing her private letters and Perto, appearing at this time, offers his assistance. A furious automobile race is on. The auto in which Osborn is riding turns turtle and the occupants are severely injured. Petro also sustains a bruised arm. The next day an item in the newspapers tells of the accident, and also on the same page the winner of the grand prize in the lottery is announced. Jane on seeing the winning number curiously inspects Petro's ticket. Sage discouraged, calls on Jane and offers her one-third of the legacy providing she marries the man of her choice. Petro comes in as Jane says to her cousin, "This gentleman is a multi-millionaire, and in marrying him I retain the terms of the will and forfeit nothing."

MOTHER LOVE VS. GOLD (Dec. 23).—A pair of precious loafers in a mining town learn from one of their "kidney" that Dick Mackey's partner, Bill Bryson, has died and that his gold dust is cached in Dick's cabin. They get sober and conclude to rob Mackey, but find that he is too quick on "the draw," and give it up. They then put their experience from a correspondence school in operation and write to Bill Bryson's wife, telling her that Dick has killed her husband, stolen his gold and jumped his claim, offering to help her if she will come to Black Butte and abide by their advice. She comes soon, bringing her infant. They plan to have her feign illness at Mackey's cabin door, and when he goes for the doctor, to let them in and they will share the gold concealed in the cabin. She demurs, but they emphasise the enormity of Mackey's offense in murdering her husband, so she finally consents. She goes to his cabin and when taken in, she finds that her own baby is seriously ill. Her feigned illness is forgotten—her great desire is for her own child. Mackey recognizes her predicament, and goes for a doctor. With his departure, a new change comes into her life. She recognizes that he is a better man than his accusers have led her to believe, and prepares to fortify herself against the villains' coming, which she knows will be soon. She has hardly had time to attend to the little one and barred the door, before the ruffians are assaulting the cabin and demanding that she find the gold. She parleys with them through the closed door and finally puts up a defense so stubborn it lasts until Mackey returns from a neighboring ranch with a doctor and help. The rascals are foiled. Happily, the baby's life is saved and the mother is so grateful that a month later she becomes Mrs. Dick Mackey, and he takes up all the responsibilities of his late partner.

HIS SISTER (Dec. 26).—Frank Alvin, from childhood up, as well as his mother, has yielded to the whims of his spoiled sister, Lillian. The money intended for the education of both was diverted and lavished upon the sister, while the brother remained to drudge throughout the hard years in the village store. In the interim, the girl is sent to an Eastern seminary, thence to a fashionable girls' college, and finally returns, the finishing product of education, ready for social conquest; but is disconsolate over the thought of dwelling in the pokey, slow, old town. The brother gives up his slowly accumulated savings to provide for a pretty home, but this does not satisfy her cravings, and she grows more and more exacting. She goes further, and steps between he and his sweetheart. It is then that all the man arouses in him and he bitterly reproves his sister for the selfishness of her life. Fate, however, takes a hand, and the judge, whose daughter was betrothed to Frank, accidentally happens to overhear this talk between brother and sister, and believing in the justice of the man, so adroitly manipulates in his favor that he comes out victorious. How happiness was accrued for all concerned, is told in the film.

DOC YAK'S CHRISTMAS (Dec. 25).—Old Doc Yak in his time has experienced many vicissitudes in his precarious practice. The collection of bills has caused him more annoyances, more funny falls and more amusing contretempes, than almost any creation in the domain of cartoon. He has met all forms of man and beast that the broad empire of the world could furnish. He has butted in into all sorts of predicaments and happily has the faculty of butting out, so that although jarred by many falls, he usually lands right side up—merely seeing stars does not disconcert him. This new adventure is with the children's favorite, Santa Claus. Doc Yak has been "done" so much and so often, that he feels gifts are due him. How he "gets his," is an amusing and ingenious story of this popular Christmas offering from the crayon of Sidney Smith.

A DIP IN THE BRINEY (Dec. 24).—Commodore Nutt and Captain Swivel take a jolly party of young folks in a cruise on their yacht. Their boys, Lem Nutt and Chat Swivel, are incorrigible mischiefs, and the love-making begins with the girls before the anchor is dropped in a friendly harbor where the bathing is good. The spooning among the youngsters is so noisy and so continuous, that the Commodore and the Captain are scandalized and give strict and emphatic orders to "cut it out." Thereupon the young folks plan a royal revenge.

The two ancients prefer the solitude of their private bathing beach and repair to a lonely cove, where they swim daily, unimpeded by striped bathing suits. The girls steal their clothes one morning in a very ladylike manner and present them to the boys. When the elderly gentlemen come back to where they have cashed their clothing, they find only their caps and their oxfords. They are forced to drape themselves with seaweed and make a dash through the village in order to reach the yacht. They are chased by the Grassville Sheriff, but finally swim out to their yacht. Immediately they lay hands on the rails, they are pushed off, and they are not allowed to board until they promise not to interfere with the prerogatives of the young people, in having the best possible time under the circumstances.

AN INDIAN DON JUAN (Dec. 23).—The Indian chief is very proud of his squaw and her child and they are happy until the serpent enters their Eden. Whitefeather, a ruffling Indian brave, has a winning way with the maidens together with a smooth tongue. He is taken with Red Wing and waylays her at every opportunity, seeking to bribe her affections with trinkets. His own sweetheart notices her lover's unfaithfulness and going to the chief falsely tells him that his wife is untrue to him. He therefore watches his wife and seeing her with Whitefeather jumps to the conclusion that the accusation is true. He orders Red Wing with her child to be taken into the desert a day's march and left without food and drink. This is done and the poor mother left to the torments of hunger and thirst. Whitefeather's repentant sweetheart then goes to the chief and tells him that his wife was falsely accused. The chief leaves at once with his braves to search the desert. After a long and weary search the chief finds the fainting mother—alone, for the baby has succumbed to privations.

Dan pursues Harold and taking the suitcase and letter of introduction from him compels him to exchange clothing with him. He introduces himself at the Arnold house as Harold and at first is welcomed, but Mr. Arnold soon becomes suspicious. In the meantime poor Harold looking like a fright in Dan's absurd clothing is chased by a bulldog up the same tree with Ruth, who thinks at once that he is the escaped lunatic. Matters are finally cleared up, the real lunatic captured by the officers and the acquaintance thus oddly begun threatens to ripen into a closer relationship.

panies Peter to his uncle's home. Florence, introduced as Howard Long, attempts to play the part of a man, even to smoking a cigar, and finally is led to the same bed chamber as her lover. Here an amusing series of happenings precedes Florence's departure to the drawing-room, where she spends the night on a lounge. The next day she accompanies the men to a barber shop to be shaved, after which they all journey to Schmidt's estate. Florence cleverly schemes to retain the love of Peter and in every way works to hinder the success of Nora. Finally she secures the note for $10,000 with which Schmidt has threatened to ruin her lover's uncle. In her guise of an attractive young man she carries on a flirtation with Nora. The guests at a party see on a window shade the shadow of Nora and a man kissing her. Schmidt jumps to the conclusion that his daughter and Shanley have accepted each other and announces their engagement. In due time Florence discloses the fact that she, not Shanley, made love to Nora and secured the note against the young man's uncle. Peter and Florence are united with the good wishes of all concerned.

THE MOTH AND THE FLAME (Special—2 parts —Dec. 27).—Oswald, a young farmer, becomes suspicious of the growing intimacy between Nellie and Arthur Conway, a city visitor in the neighborhood. Conway by playing upon Nellie's vanity persuades her that her voice and personality would make a hit upon the stage and so wins her over to run away with him. Oswald returns home one night to find that he and his little son have been deserted.

Nellie goes to the city and hopes to find in wine, fine dresses and song an antidote to the longing for her little son, but in vain. She is haunted by the vision of her deserted family and stung by repentance returns home. Little Bud in the meantime has run away from home to find his mother and becomes lost in the woods. He is later found unconscious by his anxious father and contracts penumonia. The mother returns in time to find the child convalescent and is forgiven through Bud's intercession.

FORCU, AN ISLAND OF THE IONIAN SEA (Dec. 27).—Interesting views of a famous island which is so attractive that the German emperor has a castle there. Corfu has an area of 431 square miles only, but a population of 125,000. Picturesque portions of the island are here shown together with scenes of the inhabitants at their daily pursuits.

BIOGRAPH.

FOR HER GOVERNMENT (Dec. 22).—He was one of a league whom society thought honest. The little French lady who became his wife believed him a diplomatic spy for her government, so she sailed quite contentedly off to America to work with him. Far from home and friends, she learned his true character, but the crisis was met.

HER WEDDING BELL (Dec. 25).—Pedro, newly arrived in this "land of the free," believed he had found the ultimatum of the brotherhood of man, and accordingly saw no reason why a gardener should not love the lady of the garden. His dream was rudely shaken, however, but in fulfilling the decree which had been placed upon him as the result of his principles, he found that the lady concerned would suffer. He braved the penalty of death to save her.

THE SUICIDE PACT (Dec. 27).—If you cannot get the "old man" any other way, play on his sympathies. Pa said old millionaire Hicks was just his ideal of a son-in-law, but May hugged Harold all the harder. So Pa locked her up. But Harold was not to be baffled by mere parental opinion. Then Pa received notice that there was going to be a spectacular suicide at the top of the big bluff and was invited to be on hand. Believe me, he went with the whole town in tow.

THE CLUB CURE (Dec. 27).—Jenkins spends every night at his club, much to the perturbation of his wife. On this particular evening he turns a deaf ear on her protestations, and as usual goes to the club. A sympathizing neighbor, living in the same apartment house, suggests a plan to cure Mr. Jenkins of this failing. How well it succeeds the picture shows.

HARDING'S HERITAGE (3 parts—Released Week of Dec. 29).—Harding, a van dweller, is so wretchedly poor that he is driven to sell his van in order to get money to go to the gold fields to seek his fortune. He hires the purchasers of the van to look after his idolized little son for him while he is away. Little Paul could not have been left in worse hands. He is abused and half starved until he finally runs away with but one regret, that his playmate, Lillian, daughter of the unworthy couple, he has to leave behind. Applying for a position in a toy shop the owners, a worthy old couple, employ him and treat him like a son.

Harding meets with great success in South Africa and sends the van dwellers $600, $200 of which is for his son's board and the rest for the boy. They plot to keep all the money and are overheard by Lillian. She warns her little friend Paul, but it is too late. The van dwellers have fled. Lillian is left destitute and Paul begs his employers to take her in. They consent for his sake. Paul writes his father and tells him all.

Harding becoming wealthy prepares to return to his son. With his friend, Carahut, he goes to the nearest postoffice, a lonely building, and a great rendezvous for the miners. The Vandals, who have charge of it, are a depraved couple, the man brutal and the woman a light of love. Harding gets his son's letter, which gives him anxiety. Carahut falls into the coils of Mrs. Vandal and is caught at his love-making by her husband, who shoots at Carahut to kill him. Harding in trying to save his friend is himself fatally wounded. He leaves to Carahut a letter to his son, telling him that his fortune is in the safe care of a lawyer who will turn it over to him.

Olive Vandal plots with her husband to secure the money left in Carahut's charge by Harding. She entices Carahut to the edge of a cliff, where he is attacked by Vandal and in the struggle both men go over the edge of the cliff. Olive finds Harding's letter and plans to secure the fortune by marrying the boy, and so leaves the country.

Paul and Lillian have now reached manhood and womanhood. One day Olive, exquisitely gowned and beautiful, comes into the store, makes a small purchase which is to be delivered at her house. Paul delivers the package to her house and immediately becomes a victim to her wiles and is presented with her portrait. Soon afterward a letter from Carahut is received by Paul telling him of the father's death and of the fortune to which he is heir. Paul when aware of his good fortune goes to Olive and proposing is at once accepted.

Carahut was not killed by the fall, but was rescued by some natives. On arriving in Paul's home city he calls at the shop, but Paul is absent. Mr. Kingman, Paul's employer, tells him of Paul's engagement and shows him Olive's portrait, which Carahut at once recognizes. Horrified at the news, Carahut at once goes to the woman's house to save Paul. On arriving he sends in to Paul by a servant a note telling him of the woman's wickedness. Paul, furiously angry at first, finally believes. He conceals himself and witnesses the woman's attempt to bribe Carahut to go away and keep silent. Paul then rushes out and the woman seeing her game is up kills herself. Freed from his infatuation Paul sees the devotion, beauty and goodness of Lillian and returns her love. So thus they are happy.

WHEN PIERROT MET PIERRETTE (2 parts—Dec. 3).—Georgina Peters is constantly reproached by her mother for her boydenish manners, and she persuades her to emulate her sister, Louise. Louise is infatuated with Chalmers, a society man, but unknown to her is a crook at heart; Georgina is in love with Dick Rogers, a young physician Louise receives a valuable necklace which she shows to Chalmers, who later plans with two of his pals to get possession of the jewel. Rogers invites the mother to his home and tells her that her daughter, Georgina, is now old enough to keep company; but the stern mother refuses. Rogers receives a letter from Georgina telling him to take her to his mother's house or else she will go herself. At the same time Chalmers is the recipient of a hastily scribbled message from Louise, saying that she is ready to elope with him. Rogers complies with the request and after spending a pleasant evening he escorts her safely to her home. As Georgina is retiring that night she is surprised to see her sister about to elope with Chalmers. Georgina stops her and the villain Chalmers leaves, disgusted. Hearing their mother approaching Georgina hurriedly dresses in her sister's clothes to convey the impression that it was she who had intended to elope. The irate mother orders the girl from the house. After Georgina has left the heartbroken mother is told the true state of affairs by Louise.

In the meantime Georgina has been invited to take an auto ride by Chalmers and his friends, who found the girl by the roadside. Bringing the girl to their retreat they force her to write a note to Rogers saying that she is safe and that she would like him to meet her at the masqued ball, she being dressed as Pierrette and he to be dressed as Pierrot. When Rogers receives the note he quickly dons his masque and is soon at the ball, where he is captured by Chalmers and his confederates. They force him to sign a check for a large amount of money. To refuse would mean the death of Pierette, so he makes a check out to their order and signs it. But the villains have not reckoned with the officers who have seen the abduction and followed. The crooks are arrested and Rogers brings his sweetheart home to her penitent mother, who forgives all.

TROUBLE ON THE STAGE (Dec. 7).—Mr. Wild, director of the Gasoscope Studio, is rehearsing his stock company in a table scene. Over and over again he tries the scene, and at last, in his rage, breaks three plates, for which he is promptly called down by Bill, the property man. The camera man grinds away, and the picture is taken, but the camera man has walked in front of the lens. Wild is beating him up when called to the 'phone. "Universal wants to know if they can see your split reel soon?" He tries once more. His actors perform creditably until one part of the scene, when the temperamental leading man gives Wild an argument, and the latter gives up in disgust. The phone rings again. "We must have the split reel tomorrow morning." An idea! The carpenter, the painter, the scene shifter and the mechanic are called.

A screamingly funny dress rehearsal follows. The maid breaks a plate and the solicitous "props" gets sore. There is another fight. The gallant painter plasters "props" with his whitewash brush, and to cap the climax the scenery falls down. After two hundred feet have been ground off, Wild finds that the camera man has placed an empty whisky bottle where the take-up box should be. The phone rings again. "Mistake, Universal is waiting for the drama."

In a wonderful scene, order is restored from chaos, as the stage hands "set" the scene in record time. A mantle appears, the portieres are hung, the sideboard and buffet are arranged, the carpet rolled out, the pictures hung, and the room is put in perfect order. Wild has his troupers essay a drama and the picture ends in a howling travesty.

MAGNETISM AND MAGNETS (Dec. 7).—The various formations of magnetic material are strikingly shown and the different properties of magnetic forces are demonstrated in startling examples. The wonderful lifting power of the different kinds and sizes of magnetized bars furnish opportunity for much discussion and some of the feats done with the magnets will astonish and mystify your audience. It is a subject educational and instructive, but presented in such a way that the entertaining quality of the reel is always to the fore, and you are sorry when the closing scene is ended.

HE LIKES THINGS UPSIDE DOWN (Dec. 14).—Snookums is being amused by the neighbor's kid next door, who gracefully stands on his head for minutes at a time. When he refuses to keep his position permanently, Snookums raises a holler. The Newlyweds are highly indignant at the neighbor's child for refusing to keep his head-standing position for the edification of Snookums.

Newlywed stands on his head until he is black in the face, but is unable to maintain this position all the time. Poor Newlywed is at his wits' end, but finally a happy thought strikes him. His little Snookums shall have things upside down. He retires, and gracefully redonning his trousers in the reverse, sticks his hand through the bottom of his trousers and waves them as feet, for the enjoyment of Snookums, and the kid at last has things upside down.

NUTTY HAS A ROMANCE (Dec. 14).—Nutty goes fishing. He finds a bottle containing a message which reads, "I am abandoned on Sea Food Island, with millions of dollars in gold, and will marry the first man that comes to my rescue.

"Signed, Fatima."

Nutty at once decides to go after the gold and the lady, and packing up his fishing tackle, returns to the city for a suitable ship. He purchases a most artistic roomy bathtub, and starts off.

The lady in distress, a dainty little thing, weighing about 460 pounds, is gracefully tripping around the trunk of her island home, an enormous tree, looking in vain for her manly rescuer to arrive.

Meanwhile, Nutty opens fire on an imaginary enemy and demolishes everything in sight with the rapid-firing gun. He then proceeds, victoriously and triumphantly in his bathtub warship to the deserted island. Tiny Fatima rushes to meet him. In his anxiety to reach her, Nutty dives overboard, and swims the rest of the way. They embrace—that is, she embraces him.

Nutty is tired, and goes gracefully to sleep. A suspicion enters the fair one's mind—that Nutty is after her gold and not her, and she decides to steal his bathtub and sail for parts unknown. He rushes down to the bank, and sees her waving a fond good bye.

THE HIGHWAYMAN'S SHOES (2 parts—Dec. 24).—When Lord Mayor Harper's wife dies, he grows bitter against their second born child, a boy. An old servant is bribed to carry the child away and desert it in the forest. An old witch brings this baby to her home. A slipper is left on the child's foot. This she treasures, and later has the boy wear it around his neck.

Twenty years elapse. In a diary which Lord Mayor Harper has kept remains an entry of his act. The boy makes his living by singing. The captain of the King's Guards openly insults the boy one day and flaunts his ignorance of his parents in his face. Jaspar, the boy, stabs him. Returning home he demands to know of his foster mother who his parents are.

The King's Guards follow him to the house, but he escapes over the roof, makes a daring leap to his horse's saddle and rides off. He comes to a stone marking the grave of the famous highwayman, Dick Mount. Possessed of a natural adventuresome spirit, he decides to become a highwayman himself.

In his wanderings Jasper encounters the daughter of Lord Mayor Harper and makes her change horses with him. Meanwhile, Lord Princeton, a neighbor, who has been refused the hand of the girl for his son, carries away the diary which tells of Harper's crime.

Time elapses and a price is placed on Jasper's head. In trying to see his foster mother he is threatened with capture. In escaping he finds the diary which Princeton had lost. He has two other encounters, one with Princeton's son, who is forced to change clothes with him, and one with Harper's daughter. Princeton's son is captured as the highwayman and rushed to the stocks. His father finds him and berating the crowd for their stupidness, has them release the boy.

Meanwhile the real highwayman enters Harper's house. He is surprised by the daughter. Soldiers surround the house and in trying to escape he is mortally stabbed. She hides him in a secret opening in the fireplace. In groping about, his hand strikes something and he finds it is the mate of the shoe which the old foster mother had given him years before. The old witch is brought in and while they question her Jasper tumbles out from the hiding-place and falls at their feet with the shoe clasped in his hand. He gasps out his story to the heartbroken father and sister. They tearfully gather about him as he breathes his last—a highwayman, but a gentleman.

NUTTY IS DEAD—LONG LIVE NUTTY (Dec. 28).—Nutty, a young medical student, is broke. He receives a note from his uncle saying not to expect any further money from him. His friends break in to see him. He tells them the sad state of affairs. He seizes a tremendous horse pistol and is about to commit suicide when a bright idea strikes him.

One of his friends writes a note to uncle, stating that Nutty has died of starvation. Hurriedly a skeleton is placed in Nutty's bed. The note is received by the uncle and his wife, and regretting their harsh treatment, they purchase two enormous wreaths, which take two men to carry, and rush to the house. The friends hear them coming. Nutty is thrust under the sofa and his companions all draw their handkerchiefs to hide their grief. The old man draws a large check for the funeral expenses. His wife overcome with grief seats herself on the sofa. Suddenly the uncle lets out a wild howl of surprise as he sees an enormous pair of feet sticking out from under his wife's skirts. He seizes them and the discomfited Nutty is brought to light. The enraged aunt and uncle dash for the stairs. Nutty and his friends in place of a wake prepare for an all night session.

APPLY TO JANITOR (Dec. 28).—Mixer, Henpeck and Fuss, are discussing the coming championship bout between Oscar, the Terrible, and Terry Fitzcorbett, in their favorite bar. Henpeck goes home and finds wife asleep. He leaves a note saying he will not be home to dinner, as he is going to the "box fight." Fuss returns to find his wife and she breaks a heavy plate on his head. He joins Henpeck and they leave for the fight. Oscar the Terrible knocks Terry's teeth out and in the fourteenth round puts him out for the count.

The three cronies reach the home, but the elevator is not running. A sign reads, "Apply to Janitor." They do so, and Jake appears and proceeds to knock the three of them down for disturbing him. While his back is turned, they are about to retaliate, when he turns around and with a sweep of his hand knocks Mixer's head completely off. He throws Henpeck to the ceiling and he comes down a crumpled mass. Fuss is sent upstairs with one blow. He sweeps up the various remains of the three fight lovers and crams them into an ash barrel.

cued Shorty, a twice convicted burglar The little door in the south wall of the criminal branch of the Supreme Court opens and a Central Office detective strides into the room, his right wright handcuffed to the left wrist of a burglar, who trailed a step behind. The case of the people against Joseph Condon, alias "Little Joe," alias "Idaho Shorty," charged with burglary, was called for trial A stool pigeon had accused him of having committed a third burglary, though at the time when the crime was perpetrated Shorty had been doing odd jobs in the aviation fields. The third conviction would mean a life term in Sing Sing. He pleaded innocent. Mary was his only witness. Shorty is convicted and the soul of Mary sings a hymn of sadness as she makes her way along the lonely road toward the imprisoned man she loves. But Mary has faith in the line, "Then shalt thou call and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry and He shall say, here I am."

Months pass and Shorty remains in prison because he has failed to secure an alibi. Mary writes to him of a vision that she has had: that one Christmas a miracle will be performed.

On Christmas day, the warden, in the spirit of the holiday, permits the couple to be together a great deal. There is a performance in the evening. Mary keeps up his courage, but at night Shorty becomes more despondent, not having the faith that the girl has. Then came the great treat that was to close the show and bring an end to Christmas day. The last one was to show the progress made in aerial exploration.

"Splendid flights of aviators at Hempstead Plains, Long Island, June 20th," read the title of the moving picture. There is a gang of laborers in the foreground. There is whispered conversations. Miracle Mary is on her feet.

"The Miracle!"

Again her voice lifted, shaking, but carrying to every corner of the great hall.

"The Miracle!"

There it is in the movies. You all see Shorty there and the date is June 20. The picture proves his alibi, though the foreman did refuse to identify Shorty in the trial. That night the warden telegraphs the state of affairs to the Governor of New York at Albany.

IMP.

THE ACTOR'S CHRISTMAS (Dec. 22).—King, a broken down actor, who in former years had been a great star, is willing to take any work that the agent will give. He succeeds in getting a day's work to play "Santa Claus" for a wealthy banker's family. He takes the job, for the five dollars means a Christmas dinner for his little family. At the banker's house he makes up for the part and, thinking of his little one at home, he takes some of the candy from the Christmas tree and conceals it in his pocket. The butler observes this, and, taking advantage of the situation, steals a valuable bracelet and blames the theft on King. King pleads his innocence, and tells them he only stole the candy for his little girl. His pleadings so move the banker that he is forgiven, and the butler, who overhears him through the half open door, brings the bracelet to the banker, telling him that he found it where it had been mislaid. When King is about to leave, the banker gives him an overcoat, and instead of the five dollars promised, gives him quite a roll, which is augmented by some bills that the butler also slips in his pocket. King goes home happy, but finds as it is Christmas, that it will be impossible to get anything till the next day. LOVE OR A THRONE (2 parts—Dec. 25).—In a remote part of southern Germany there is a little kingdom, Rurania, which, in its small sphere, embraces all the political intrigues and sorrows of a larger kingdom. The monarch, Freiderich, old and weak, has two sons, the Crown Prince Wilhelm, and Albert. The king is a tool of his ministers and the early accession of Wilhelm is feared by them because of his evident strength and power. The Crown Prince, under an assumed name, has met the opera singer, Olga, and fallen in love with her. She, unaware of his true identity, has responded. While the young man remains in the distant city with his sweetheart the old king dies. The prince realizes his responsibilities, but at the same time knows that it means separation from the woman he loves. He decides to decline the throne. Olga, at the time that the prime minister pleads with him not to commit the sacrifice, discovers the prince's identity and she, too, pleads with him to return.

In the meantime, seeing their hopes blighted in Wilhelm's accession, the conspirators plan to assassinate him and allow the younger brother to ascend. Wilhelm consents to go to the palace and becomes king, but only for a day. After his departure the prime minister pleads with Olga to give him up. After a bitter struggle within, she consents. She instructs the minister to bring the king to the cafe, which is close to the fortifications, the following evening. This is also the same evening on which the young king is to be assassinated.

The man whom she chooses as her pretended lover, to disgrace herself in the eyes of the king, is the man who carries in his gloves a small piece of paper with instructions written to "Strike the king at midnight." The king arrives; he sees the woman he loves and respects in the arms of a young officer. He renounces her. She feigns drunkenness. The scene is taken to her apartments, where the king's terrible denunciation leaves her unconscious on the floor of her room.

Midnight draws near and the girl lies on the floor. In the library of the palace sits the young king. Outside the conspirators await. Olga awakens and observes the paper on the floor left by the officer when he withdrew his glove. She reads and realizes what it means. Noting the time, she rushes from the house. The conspirator, revolver in hand, conceals himself behind the curtains in the library, awaiting the signal. Olga enters—sees the man behind the curtains and is afraid to speak. She slowly creeps forward as the king is quietly reading; she throws herself into the curtains and grapples with the man. A shot rings out, but misses its mark. There is a tremendous scene; the conspirators are placed under arrest. The minister tells the king why Olga assumed drunkenness and he determines to forsake all and go with her. The picture closes with the faithful minister on his knees to the new king, Albert, saying, "The king is dead, long live the king."

BLOODHOUNDS OF THE NORTH (2 parts—Dec. 23).—In an out-of-the-way spot in the mountains, a colony of refugees have gathered for mutual aid and protection. They are men from the United States and Canada, who are wanted for various crimes. One day, a man who is being sought for embezzlement, arrives at the colony, with his daughter, Pauline. The embezzler is a man of brains, and a natural leader of men, and thus, to the leader, James' chagrin, he becomes virtually the leading spirit in the colony.

In the meantime, two members of the Northwest Mounted Police, Lon and Mac, are on the embezzler's trail. As they near the colony, the embezzler, without James' knowledge, stations his men and instructs them to fire on the mounted police.

As Lon and Mac have only revolvers, they are easy prey to the refugees with rifles. Mac is wounded. The embezzler's daughter takes him to her cabin. On one occasion the girl leaves the cabin, and confers with her father. Lon follows her, and learns her secret—that her father is there and is the man they are seeking.

Believing that he has the girl at his mercy, Lon makes advances to her. Mac interferes, because he, also, has fallen in love with Pauline. Lon then

TALK

There is a man in Indiana who made the statement some weeks ago that the careful operator could get a better light with 30 amperes direct current at the arc than the careless operator could produce with 50 to 60 amperes D. C. at the arc. I don't know why this fellow made the statement, unless he is particularly interested in some device which changes A. C. to D. C. at 30 amperes—Any fool knows, without being told, that in order to produce a good picture the operator must know his business, and my observation has been that the operators of today are, as a class, competent and careful. Of course, we manufacturers have to tell the operators what to do with our machines, Economizers, etc., but I have had no trouble in securing good results with my "HALLBERG" Economizers, no matter what the ampere output is. I think the man who boosts 30 amperes direct current, in preference to 50 or 60 amperes D.C. at the arc, is away behind the times, and he will wake up soon, because the exhibitor himself, being urged by the operator for more light, is beginning to appreciate the value of a splendid light on the screen—It makes the picture talk—It makes it live—It makes it a living, acting picture instead of a mere shadowgraph or ordinary moving picture. I want to help you to produce a good picture, and with my "HALLBERG" line of Economizers, especially where you have alternating current, you can use my celebrated "HALLBERG" A.C. to D.C. Economizer, producing results on the screen unknown to the average exhibitor—Don't be a piker and let the other fellow come in from out of town and put it all over you by starting a new house with modern equipment—Put in new machines, "HALLBERG" Economizers and give your operator a treat—Then he will produce a show that you will be proud of.

I take old machines in trade as part payment for new ones and I also make liberal allowance on your old rheostats A.C. Economizers, A.C. to D.C. converters and Rectifiers in trade for the celebrated "HALLBERG" A.C. to D.C. Economizers which give the BEST LIGHT with the LEAST CURRENT.

tells him of the girl's father. Mac's duty is plain to him. He goes to James and demands the surrender of the embezzler. James complies and Mac arrests Pauline's father. The girl then appeals to Lon, promising him everything if he will save her parent.

Lon lifts his revolver to shoot Mac. However, other refugees watch the arrest of the embezzler, and mistake Lon's intention. Lon is shot and as they shoot at Mac, the embezzler is shot and killed. They are about to finish their work, when another man of the Mounted comes up and covers them, while Mac disarms them. The picture fades out as the helpless girl looks from her dead father to Mac—a man she can respect, and has already learned to love.

THE WATER WAR (2 parts—Dec. 27).—The story revolves around the building of a great aqueduct for irrigation purposes in the West. This aqueduct must be completed by a given time. The president of the company, alarmed at the slow progress of construction work, discharges Woodward, the foreman, who is unable to get the best work out of his laborers. Woodward remains as a gang boss, and Steelman is put in his place.

The first act of Steelman's is to discharge Canimbo, an Indian chief, and his gang of Indian laborers, because they defy him when he urges them to greater speed. Canimbo and Woodward plot together to avenge their supposed wrongs against the new foreman. This plot to put Steelman in bad is overheard by Canimbo's sister, Nereeda. The powder house is first blown up by the schemers. Steelman is injured. Nereeda rescues him and takes him to the doctor. A train of cars, which contain a new supply of powder, is blown up, following a terrible struggle between Nereeda and Canimbo, in which Canimbo throws his sister off the train.

When the work is completed on scheduled time, in spite of the obstacles, Nereeda again learns of a plot to destroy the work at the grand opening. A great assembly of people gather to witness the first flow of water. The Indian girl steals up to the sleeping Indian who holds the fuse which is to blow up the gates, throws her blanket over his head, extinguishes the burning fuse and ties him with it.

Finally, when Steelman is showing the president's daughter over the aqueduct, the two desperate men make a last attempt to kill him. Nereeda is again the savior. She shoots and kills her own brother, while Steelman grapples with the deposed foreman, and throws him over a cliff. We leave Nereeda as the twilight closes around her at a distance, while Steelman and the white girl plan for the great tomorrow, unconscious of an aching heart, who has sacrificed all for them.

THE SHRINER'S DAUGHTER (2 parts—Dec. 22).—William Lambert and George Goodrich were partners in business and rivals in love for the hand of Anne Cortell. When Lambert was accepted by Anne and they were happily married, the jealousy of Goodrich knew no bounds.

A few years after the marriage Anne dies, leaving Lambert a widower. Goodrich, in passing the house, sees Lambert leave to go to a meeting of the Shriners, his child remaining in care of the maid, and he sees a chance for revenge. Watching his chance, he steals the child and goes to a Western county. Lambert, returning from the Shriner's meeting, is heartbroken over the disappearance of his child; he can find no trace of his daughter, and her disappearance remains a mystery.

Goodrich, in the meantime, posing as the father of Helen, becomes sick and is visited by Mission workers, one of whom, pitying the child, adopts her. Later, Goodrich tries to prevail on the woman to give the child back to him. Her love for the child has grown and rather than part with her, she tries to buy him off and pays him a sum of money. This opens to Goodrich a new field of usefulness for the child—better to let her live with the kind woman, and he collect the toll. Ten years later Goodrich keeps on imposing his toll on the woman—her love for the child being so great that rather than give her up, she pays to the father the money he demands.

The girl, now grown into womanhood, enters a hospital as a trained nurse, where she meets a young doctor. He falls in love with her, and presses his suit, but she refuses him, giving no reason. One afternoon, while the doctor is at the house pleading with Helen to marry him, her foster-mother comes out of the house and he asks for her permission, which is refused, she answering that there is no objection. Goodrich appears and beckoning to Helen, tries to secure from her more money. She, frightened, gives it to him and tries to hurry him off. He goes, but the doctor has seen, and so upon Helen's return, when he questions her, she tells him the story. He tries to overcome her objection by saying that he loves her for herself alone, but she still refuses.

Lambert, after all these years of grieving for his daughter, has found no means of consolation except through devotion to the Shrine. He embarks for Santa Barbara to attend the convention of the Shriners on their "Hands around the State" tour. While attending the festivities, he is overcome by the heat. The young doctor, Helen's lover, who is also a Shriner, is the first at his side, and has him taken to the hospital, where he is placed under the care of Helen. Later, Lambert now convalescing, is being wheeled by the young doctor and Helen through the grounds. Lambert recognizes his former partner and rival even through all the lines of age and dissipation, and asks the girl who he is. She tells him that it is her father. Looking into her face, he sees there the likeness between this girl and his dead wife, and the whole magnitude of Goodrich's scheme appals him. He takes his daughter in his arms and he tells her the story. Later, Goodrich has been disposed of by due process of law, and Helen, the young doctor and her real father, make a pretty picture as they happily piece together the story which has made up their lives.

THE ROSE OF SAN JUAN (Dec. 27).—Ben Cameron, a young Southerner from Virginia, goes to California in the early fifties to take up government land. As he enters the little city of San Juan he finds upon the road a starving Spanish peon, Ozozco. Moved by his physical condition, Cameron takes the boy to his home, passing the Mission in the town of San Juan, where a Padre of the Mission is talking to Inez, the rose of her fair California. Love at first sight dominates, and at the fandango that night, Cameron again meets the beautiful Inez, proving her champion when an insulting drunken Spaniard attempts to trespass upon the freedom of the girl Inez. Land grabbers everywhere cause great distress to the Spaniards, who kill at sight all gringoes thieving or taking their lands unlawfully.

To avenge himself, the drunken Spaniard causes a raid upon the privacy of Cameron, who is in the act of questioning a number of land grabbers, who are about to make a wholesale raid upon the little village of San Juan. Cameron, captured by order of the commandant, is doomed to be shot when Ozozco, proving a friend in need, crawls to the stacked muskets and replaces the good cartridges with blanks. Cameron, when shot, falls as f dead and so escapes by the aid of the faithful Ozozco and his sweetheart. Standing on the mountain peak, Cameron holding his sweetheart, now his wife, in his arms, looks over the state they are leaving for a new world beyond.

RELIANCE.

THE MIGHTY ATOM (Dec. 15).—Miss Prue and Mr. Bond occupy two lower flats in the same apartment house. They are both middle aged, and although they are fond of each other, neither has the courage to express his feelings.

Mrs. Post, a neglected wife, is evicted from her humble lodgings with an infant. In despair she contemplates suicide, but as she is about to take one last look at the infant's smiling face, she concludes she has no right to take the life of the child. It would be better to leave it with a respectable person. Fortune directs her to Bond's flat. As she finds no one home, she is enabled to leave the baby and make her escape unseen. Bond is naturally very much surprised and upset when he discovers the baby. He is in despair until Miss Prue, whose maternal instincts have been aroused by baby's cries, comes to his rescue. They decide that the only thing to do is to take the child to the police station, but by the time they arrive at the station house, the "mighty little atom" has so won their hearts that they are loath to part with it. Bond settles the question by proposing marriage. They return to the flat, taking the baby with them; then the "atom's" mother just gets one more glimpse of her child, and goes away satisfied, knowing that it will be well taken care of.

THE PSEUDO PRODIGAL (Dec. 17).—The spoiled son of an indulgent father gives up his home and career after a quarrel and leaves home. He drifts down the path of life with vice and degradation as his companions. He meets a girl in a saloon whose life has always been in the depths and falls in love with her. This girl meets a sister of charity, who tells her of "The Light About the Throne," and urges her to reform, giving her a card and telling her to call on her at any time she needs help. One day the rival of the prodigal son taunts him with the fact that he had the girl before he did and they fight, the rival being worsted and swears revenge.

The girl is now repentant of her past and sets out to seek the Sister of Mercy, who secures her a position as maid in the house of the prodigal's father who, since his son left home, has been helping charitable organizations. The son follows the girl and finds out she has gone to the sister and has left her old life, and he gives her up, although he still loves her. The girl is at his father's home and the father of the prodigal, lonely for his son, falls in love with her. The rival of the prodigal follows the girl to the father's home and tells the father of the girl's past, which she admits. Despite her past the father still loves her and takes her in his arms. The prodigal returns just in time to see his girl in his father's arms and realizing that he has caused the old man enough trouble in the past and not wishing to spoil his new found happiness nor that of the girl, he turns away and goes back to the world as a real man.

Hern sees that Hazel is given a good part and during rehearsals invites her to lunch, sends her flowers and beautiful clothes, which he tells her she can pay for later. Fanny Rice, a sort of adventuress, who has had an affair with Hern early in her life, tries to warn Hazel, but Hazel becomes indignant, telling her that Mr. Hern has nothing but a fatherly interest in her. Fanny intercepts a telegram Hern sends to Hazel, asking her to go away with him that night. Fanny changes the numbers on her's and Hazel's doors, which are close together and when Hern raps as he thinks on Hazel's door he is confronted by Fanny. Fanny, in order to save Hazel in spite of herself, sends for J. Bell, who arrives soon after Hern. Fanny proves to both Hazel and Bell that Hern is only playing with Hazel, and it is only through the pleading of Hazel and Bell that Fanny allows Hern to escape through a window when they hear the police at the door.

The old lady makes a trail of flour to Faith's door.

Faith is nursing the child of a poor fisherman, Mildred, who dies. The Farley woman incites the village people into arresting Faith, who is tried and found guilty. A new governor arrives on the day of execution, who is prejudiced against capital punishment for witchcraft, and orders all imprisoned for that crime pardoned and banished from the settlement. This frees Faith, and she and Richard prepare to leave the village. In the meantime, the Indians have attacked the village and are just about to destroy the settlement. Armed men coming from the ship on which the governor arrives, put the Indians to flight and our story closes with a pretty picture of Richard and Faith leaving for the next colony to take up their abode.

THANHOUSER.

PEGGY'S INVITATION (Dec. 16).—A society woman who lives in the suburbs near the sea had laid her plans to insure the marriage of her daughter to a wealthy young banker. The banker accepted an invitation to spend a week end at her home, and was also to be one of the guests at a masquerade party the mother was to give. To secure novelty the woman instead of issuing regular invitations, had them printed on the back of masks, so that each guest would bring his mask and invitation at the same time. The servant, whose duty it was to distribute the invitations, lost one of them and did not discover it until later. The lost invitation was found by a poor fisher girl, who, yielding to a sudden impulse, donned the mask on the night of the party and freely mingled with the other guests.

It happened that the daughter of the house had hoped to secure the attention of the young banker, and she told him that she had arranged to be dressed as a beggar maid. This led to a natural mistake and the banker devoted all his time to the real beggar maid, with whom he fell more and more in love. His mistake was not discovered until the guests unmasked at midnight, and then a servant told the society girl that the fisher maid had obtruded there uninvited. At the same time the girl's mother declared that she had been robbed of one of her jewels and suspicion naturally fell upon the poor girl. The young banker warmly defended her and by his action won her love and gratitude. The society girl soon found that her plans to marry the banker had utterly failed, for in course of time the rich man and the girl became man and wife.

PRINCESS.

THE LAW OF HUMANITY (Dec. 19).—Coogan is injured by a delayed blast. Brown, his employer, refuses aid when requested by Mary Coogan. Nellie Coogan, following her mother, meets Beth, Brown's daughter, who has strayed from home. Beth forgets where she lives, and Mary, returning from Brown's, ignorant of Beth's identity, takes her and Nell to the Coogan home. Left alone, the children eat headache pills, and when discovered are seriously ill. Both are put to bed and Mary is again dispatched to Brown to tell that Beth is dying. The Browns, after a night at Coogan's, forget caste, and Brown's indifference of a few hours before dispels, and he recognizes the law of humanity.

MAJESTIC.

A MAN'S AWAKENING (Dec. 26).—Big Bill finds that Carrie has left him. He discovers that she has gone with another man. At Red Gulch, he gets a reputation for recklessness and deviltry. Hurt in drunken fury he brutally refuses aid from Elsie, the sheriff's daughter. Asked to join in a poker party he pleads private and particular business. He goes to the hills and watches beside a dying prospector, who tells Bill about his sweetheart. Going back, Bill finds a mesh handbag with a bit of black rag clinging to it. He pockets it with the chain hanging out. The poker party disbands as the stage coach passengers flock in with stories of a holdup. The single female half hysterically points to Bill and shrieks, "That's him." Caught with the bag and mask, denial is worse than useless and Bill submits calmly to arrest. When Elsie brings his dinner she ignores him, but Bill, who has remembered his promise to the dead prospector, tells her his story and she promises to help. That night Bill's cell door opens, and he is bidden to hold out his hands. His handcuffs are taken off and he is given a gun. He goes out, finds a horse awaiting him, and gallops to the hills. His absence is discovered and a posse starts after him. Bill reaches the cabin, sees a light, investigates, and captures the stage robber with his booty. He forces the robber to dig a grave and after the prospector is laid to rest, takes him back to the settlement. Meeting the posse on the way, he gives him into custody. When he tries to thank Elsie his effort is a dismal failure. That evening, unable to bear the solitude of his shack, he gallops to the prospector's grave and there finds Elsie, carefully and tenderly covering the rough mound with foliage and wild flowers. He asks her "Why," and she tells him "For the sake of the girl he loved—and who loved him." The words and their accompanying look melt the last vestige of ice from around Bill's heart—and beside the lonely grave a new life opens for him.

GAUMONT.

DOLLAR BILLS AT A CENT APIECE (Dec. 23).—Lord Bellgreen makes a wager that he will go into the streets and offer a real dollar bill for a cent without finding a purchaser. For a long time it looked as if he was going to win his bet, but at last he befriended a little girl selling flowers and eventually she took compassion on him. She purchased one of the notes and went home, unaware of its value. When the winner, at the club the same evening, learned how and why he had won the wager he did not wish to accept the money. While the point was being argued the little girl and her grandmother were announced, and a way out of the difficulty presented itself. The 1000 dollars was handed to them. Not only did the present bring happiness to two deserving it, but it enabled two rich men to help along those in poor circumstances. A pretty story charmingly told.

LEONCE AND HIS GUARDIAN (Dec. 25).—It was Leonce's misfortune to have to submit to the rules and regulations of a guardian. This old gentleman decreed that Leonce was never again to borrow money; never set his foot inside a cafe; and to replace his motor by a less expensive equippage. The most galling rule of the lot, however, was that he should cease his attentions to Poupette, who would never be allowed to marry him. In a most ingenious and amusing manner Leonce succeeded in circumventing his guardian's rules, and eventually the latter capitulated and Leonce won all along the line.

THE BROKEN HEART (2 parts).—This is the short-lived romance of a young modiste who found that the claims of a proud family outweighed those of love's young dream. It shows how the sudden break of her happiness aggravated a girl's weakness and killed her as surely and suddenly as if she had been shot.

The journey is a long one, and their haste leads them to adopt every possible form of locomotion that it is possible to find. They arrive in the most rural of country, and there are reduced to the uttermost limits of despair by the lack of good locomotive power. Their experience in donkey barrows, or in riding steeplechases upon cows' backs, provide an amusing film.

A QUIET FLAT (Dec. 26).—An old bachelor lives in a nice quiet flat, until a young spinster moves into the flat next door, and then it is quiet no longer. One day she invites some friends to dine with her, and, being of very Bohemian habits, does not provide anything for them to eat, so they all sally forth and return heavily laden with viands. The spinster then finds that she has forgotten her key, and so the merry party resolves to dine upon the staircase. The tranquillity of that quiet flat is greatly disturbed by the amusing events that follow.

ECLECTIC.

HIS FATEFUL PASSION (5 parts—Dec. 11).—James Brice, having lost all his money by gambling, becomes a veritable brute. His wife, Mary, neglected and abused, secures a divorce and determines to support herself and her daughter, Ethel. She obtains a position with a noted mining engineer. Driven to desperation, the gambler kidnaps his young daughter in order to force Mary to give him money. He is discovered by the engineer, who causes his arrest and he is sent to prison. On being released, he manages to get a job with the engineer, who fails to recognize him. The entire side of a mountain is about to be blown up by dynamite. Waiting his chance, Brice succeeds in overcoming and binding the engineer and ties him to a stake directly over the place which is destined to be destroyed by the giant blast. By means of a telephone, he decoys Mary to the scene and forces her to watch the terrible results of his vengeance. His daughter, however, discovers the engineer's plight and succeeds in rescuing him just as the mighty dynamite explosion destroys the entire face of the mountain. Brice is arrested and sent to prison for twenty years.

Ten years pass. Mary and the engineer have become man and wife, and look forward to the marriage of Ethel, who is now a charming young lady. To celebrate her engagement, Ethel's parents give a masquerade ball. A mysterious guest makes his appearance and creates much comment. Seeking out Mary, the stranger presses a note into her hand. She is horrified to discover that it is from her former husband, the convict, who has succeeded in making his escape from prison. He demands a large sum of money and threatens to cause a scandal if she refuses him. She tells her husband, the engineer, who gives the escaped convict money. With the proceeds of his blackmail, Brice becomes helpless with drink and falls in the street, fracturing his skull. There he is found by his daughter's fiancee, who takes him in his automobile to the hospital. The young man and Ethel call at the hospital on the following day to inquire about the injured man. Ethel is recognized by her father, who, realizing that he cannot live, owing to his terrible injury, begs to see her mother before he dies. Mary arrives in time to offer her forgiveness to the dying man, who pays the final penalty for his misdeeds.

THE LOST DIAMOND (Three parts).—While strolling through a wood with his sweetheart, Helen, Tom Maxwell captures a magpie and presents it to his employer's daughter. It becomes quite tame and is permitted to go wherever it wills. One day, chancing to spy a diamond ring on its owner's bureau, the thieving bird picks it up in its bill and deposits it in another room. Tom is accused of stealing the ring as it is found in the room which he had just occupied, and he is discharged. He goes to the home of Helen, but meets with scant sympathy from all save his sweetheart, who believes her lover is innocent. Feeling his disgrace very keenly, Tom joins a hunting expedition and goes to South Africa. While out with a hunting party, they are attacked by a ferocious leopard, which pounces upon the leader. Tom battles with the enraged animal and after a terrific struggle, he succeeds in dispatching it, thereby saving his master's life. He is horribly wounded and is carried back to the camp. In a vision he sees his sweetheart beckoning to him, but sadly realizes that she is many miles away.

Meanwhile, the magpie is discovered in another theft, and the terrible injustice done to Tom is realized. Learning of Tom's whereabouts from a newspaper account of his encounter with the leopard in South Africa, his repentant accuser endeavors to send a message by wireless telegraphy, advising that the real thief had been discovered. The message is relayed across the continent until it is finally delivered by an African runner. Tom, having fully recovered from his injuries, makes hasty preparations to return home again. Eagerly his coming is awaited by an anxious party, who are all desirous of making amends for their cruel injustice. He is greeted by them on board the ship, and the story of the magpie's prank is told to him. Overjoyed by the glad news, he freely forgives everyone. With his sweetheart, Helen, he takes the magpie, and throwing it into the air, they watch it soar away into the distance.

THE GUERRILLAS OF ALGIERS; OR THE MOSQUE IN THE DESERT (3 parts).—The conquest of Algeria drags. Peace negotiations are slow. The Emir delegates Ben Thamy, one of his Khalifs, to communicate with the French general, Bugeaud, who, on his side, orders Colonel de Soumieges to go ahead and meet him. The colonel writes a letter to his son:

"My dear Philippe—While fighting, I am looking for the treasure which was donated to our ancestors by the Emir Abd Allah. You are young, vigorous and have a full command of Arabic. Should I succumb, you will have to take up my task. The Marabout who detains that fortune lives in a mosque bearing on its front the arms of the 'des Soumieges.' He owes us assistance and protection.

"Your father, Colonel DE SOUMIEGES."

General Bugeaud bids him a fond farewell. He was never seen again. A year later, Phillippe, with the 6th regiment, embarks aboard the "Ville-de Marseville." A strong friendship springs up between he and a young fellow named John and Corporal Piton. They enter a Moorish cafe and are surrounded by Arabs. Suddenly Phillippe sees that a plot is on foot and the plotters are his father's assassins. They pounce upon the Arabs and capture one. He is recognized as Ben Thamy, the celebrated rebel chief. Jean is sentry in front of Ben Thamy's prison, but charmed by Ben Thamy's pretty accomplice, Aicha, he allows the former to escape. Ben Thamy prepares a fresh war against the "Roumis" (foreigners). The girl follows the master she has saved, but tired of his brutalities, now hates him. Ahmed-el-Hadju defends Constantine, besieged by the French. A host of Arabs attack the French army under the walls of the city. At sight of a few men, the Arabs charge; the French line is broken. They form a square and await the enemy. Valiant Changarniere, Phillippe's squadron, attacks the Arabs and routs them. Ben Thamy takes refuge in Constantine. The assailants are victorious. Our three heroes, Phillippe de Somieges, Jean and Piton are taken prisoners by Ben Thamy. Bound to camels, they tramp wearily the burning desert. Charmed by Phillippe's fine bearing, Aicha frees them. Ben Thamy takes them at the gate of a mosque. The old Marabout in charge of the mosque, when he notices on Phillippe's finger a ring bearing the crest of the de Somieges, gives them hospitality despite the threats of Ben Thamy, to whom he reads the following writing on parchment: "By reason of service rendered by the family of Somieges to the Arabs in 1627, all the members of that family are entitled to shelter and protection within this mosque, and Marabouts owe them assistance.

"Abd-Allah."

The Marabout shows Ben Thamy the coat-of-arms of de Soumieges engraved on the stone above the door of the mosque. Ben Thamy vengefully retires. Phillippe recalls his father's letter and inquires from the Marabout if it is not he who detains the treasure of his ancestors. The old Arab leads him in a cavern, where an incredible amount of riches is gathered. "When peace is concluded, you can take possession of them," he says. Phillippe bears away with him a finely chiseled casket filled with ancient gems given him by the Marabout. Ben Thamy obtains the abrogation of the edict signed by Abd-Allah and demands the surrender of the three. Phillippe is retaken by Ben Thamy. A man is brought in the tent. Phillippe recognizes his father. They embrace. They are about to be beheaded when a company of Zouaves, headed by John, rescue them. Colonel de Soumieges kills Ben Thamy.

General Bugeau meets again his old friend, Soumieges, congratulates him on his fortunate rescue and rewards his liberators.

THE ACCURSED DRUG (3 parts).—A large silk manufacturer, Emile Garnier, receives word from the manager of his factory at Bag-Tsin, China, that the whole plant has been destroyed by pirates and that his presence or the presence of one of his partners, Robert Marty and Hughes Chavanne, is necessary at once. Mr. Garnier makes preparations to go, but before he leaves Chavanne, who has become jealous of having Marty left in entire charge while Garnier is away, incites agitation among the factory employees and a strike is called. In order to put a stop to the trouble Garnier decides to stay at home and send Marty. As he is bidding Marise, the daughter of the manufacturer with whom he is passionately in love, a fond farewell, the old negro female servant places in his hands a pair of gloves belonging to the daughter, with an admonition that "as long as your loved one will preserve something belonging to you, both your hearts will be bound together, beyond deserts and oceans."

Marty becomes despondent over the slow progress of repairing the factory at Bag-Tsin, and wishing for some kind of diversion calls upon Mme. Cantaloube, the proprietress of the cafe which Garnier said is very much appreciated by residents. In time he becomes friendly with the proprietress and one day she shows him the opium den. Being a designing woman Mme. Cantaloube succeeds in getting Marty to taste of the drug, and it is not long before he becomes a regular habitue of the den.

Marise, in the meantime, has been waiting impatiently for letters from her sweetheart, which he has ceased to write. Upon the advice of a

A MARTYR TO CONSCIENCE; or, THE SACRIFICE (Three parts).—Unable to longer stand the strain of singing on the streets with her blind father, Marion falls exhausted. Mme. de Preville, riding by in her carriage, picke her up and takes her and the blind father to her beautiful home, where, in time, Paul Dorfeuil, the betrothed of Suzanne de Preville, soon falls in love with her. Paul is caught by Suzanne with his arms around Marion, who, being an involuntary cause of an estrangement between the lovers, leaves the house with her blind father.

It is not long after that they are again on the streets singing and begging. In a restaurant Marion and her father are asked by an unknown philanthropist to sit at his table. They accept the kind assistance and the stranger offers to introduce Marion to his friend, Cora, the milliner. Cora's drawing room, well known to all pleasure-seekers, is a temple of fashion rather than a place where love adventures are to be found. It is into such a place that the pseudo-philanthropist leads Marion. One of Cora's friends takes a fancy to Marion. He follows Marion to her room. She tries to escape the odious embrace. "Help!" Hearing the cry, all the guests rush in. Miral, the artist, forces his way to the girl.

Miral assures Marion that henceforth she will be safe. By degrees, the friendship of Miral, for Marion, who poses for him, changes to sincere love, and he asks her to unite their two loves. "My heart is no longer free, Miral, let us remain good friends, will you?" For it is always Dorfeuil whom she has never ceased to love.

The latter calls on Miral and finds once more the former singer. Paul and Marion are delighted. Paul, forgetting his fiancée, promises to marry Marion. He is released from his engagement. On seeing her mother's attitude, Suzanne understands that all is over. An illness places her life in jeopardy. Crazed, Mme. de Preville calls on Marion. "I implore you, Marion, in remembrance of all the love I have given you formerly, forget Dorfeuil and perhaps he, forgetting you, will come back to my dying child

She arrives at a decision—she leaves with Miral. On hearing of her departure, Paul Dorfeuil has regained possession of his senses. Repentant, with bowed head, he confesses his fault to Suzanne de Preville. The young girl answers nothing, but lifts her eyes on him and smiles.

She eventually leaves him for another and he returns to his native land and sinks to the lowest rungs of depravity, in which condition he is found by a friend and advised to make peace with his wife. Naturally, his advances are repulsed. His daughter, having grown up, is put in a boarding school, where Gaston goes to implore the Padre, an old friend of his, to allow him just one look at his child. It is arranged that he should take his place in line on Easter Sunday, when a dinner is to be given to the poor, but he must not reveal his identity. The Padre tells him he will know his daughter by a golden cross which will hang about her neck. The child has become fast friends with a little orphan and, on Easter Sunday, when all the other children are passing with their presents, the little waif sits alone and disconsolate. In a beautifully touching scene the daughter takes the cross from off her neck and places it on that of her little friend's. Gaston, not having seen his daughter through all these years, naturally mistakes the little orphan for his own flesh and blood. He meets the child regularly after this, until one day she fails to appear, having been taken violently ill. The poor man, in distraction, is finally admitted to the sick room and his grief on seeing the poor child suffering in its last throes is pitiable. The Padre realizes the awful mistake that has been made, but dare not break in on the poor man's misery to tell him the truth. After the death of the child the truth of the situation is gradually brought home to the man, and the wife, realizing that he has suffered, relents, and all is forgiven.

MADAM SATAN (3 parts).—The Princess Lestorys, beautiful and brilliant, is much sought by London's men of affairs. Arthur Gerald, wealthy oil operator, casually remarks that he would give $100,000 for an introduction to the princess. This remark is repeated to the princess, who writes to Gerald, and suggests that in return for an invitation to her reception he forward a donation for a philanthropic institution in which she is interested. Gerald assents and sends his check for the amount. At the reception is also John Holton, a young civil engineer, deeply enamored of the princess. She declines his proposal of marriage, saying that his financial inability to provide the luxuries she demands outweighs her regard for him. Holton leaves for America, swearing to return with the necessary money. Gerald falls desperately in love with the princess. His daughter, Lena, who distrusts the adventuress, learns of her father's danger upon reading through the society columns of a newspaper. Suspicious, she obtains information from a detective agency, which brands the princess unmistakably as a peculiarly dangerous woman.

Convinced by his daughter of the princess's sinister character, Gerald leaves with Lena for his oil wells in America. Meeting Holton he engages him as manager. The princess, foiled, determines upon revenge. Following Gerald to his oil lands, she hires several desperadoes to aid her in her diabolical doings. John and Lena are ambushed, the former shot and severely wounded, and the girl kidnapped. Writing to Gerald, Madam Satan, the princess, threatens dire happenings to Lena if Gerald does not fulfill his promise of marriage. Holton, revived, springs from a rock as Madam Satan's messenger passes and falls with him to the rocky ground. The messenger is subdued.

The two hours elapse. No answer from Gerald. Madam Satan with her accomplices drag a cannon into the fields some distance from the petroleum tanks. The first shot penetrates the main reservoir, the fluid pouring outward upon the surface of the nearby river. A second shell explodes the works. The fire spreads to the oily fluid. In an instant the stream is ablaze from bank to bank. Her revenge incomplete, Madam Satan returns to her cabin and prepares for flight. Lashing Lena against the upright post, she ignites the cabin. In dashes Holton, weak from his wound. He moves toward releasing Lena. Madam Satan's pointed revolver halts him. Then within her stirs the old affection—affection for the only man she had ever loved, from whom she was separated only because of his lack of money. Her revolver drops. Holton creeps forward and cuts Lena's bonds. Out from the stifling smoke and the stabbing flames he darts, carrying the insensible Lena. Madam Satan, saddened, sickened by the cumulative remorse of her wickedness, sinks upon the burning pyre.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD (Hepworth—3 parts—Dec. 29).—Sir Wm. Thornhill wishes to keep a close watch on his nephew, Richard Thornhill, who is a dissipated young fellow In order to follow him more closely, he disguises himself and is introduced as a stranger, by the vicar, to his wife, their two daughters, Olivia and Sophia, and their son, Moses. Richard now appears in the company of two women friends of questionable reputation and is introduced to the vicar's family. In the meanwhile, Sir William has secreted himself and overhears the entire conversation. Richard is infatuated with Olivia, and by the aid of his two women companions, induces Olivia to arrange to go to London with him. In order to replenish his daughter's wardrobe, the vicar is forced to raise some money. His son, Moses, agrees to take their horse to "Ye olde English Fair." Here he foolishly exchanges the horse for a large amount of green spectacles. Upon his return home, he learns that the spectacles are of no aid to the family's finances.

Finally Richard persuades Olivia to run away with him. In order to accomplish this, he promises to marry her; but he does not intend to carry out his promise as he instructs his man, Jenkinson, to arrange a mock ceremony. Jenkinson, however, has borne a secret grudge against his master, and sees a chance for revenge. He arranges for a genuine ceremony. We see Olivia leaving her home late at night and meeting Richard, who has a carriage waiting. The bridal couple arrive at the home of a priest and the ceremony is performed. Richard, unsuspectingly signs the certificate, which Jenkinson secures for further use.

On the following morning, the vicar learns that his daughter, Olivia, has disappeared and the reason is made clear when Moses, who had met Jenkinson and learned the truth, tells his father the whole story. The old man arms himself with two pistols, and is about to depart with an evil intention, when his wife persuades him to give up the idea of murder by opening a Bible and pointing to the commandment, "Thou Shalt not Kill." Putting aside the weapons he leaves to search for his daughter. At Richard's home he is denied knowledge of their master's whereabouts by the servants.

Richard eventually becomes tired of Olivia and treats her very badly. She reproaches him for his conduct, but he informs her that she is not his wife as the ceremony had been a mock one. She leaves him and finds shelter in an inn. Fate brings her father, who is weary and footsore, to the same place and the two meet. She returns home with her father and after some deliberation is forgiven by her mother. Richard soon thinks that he would like to have Olivia back again and goes to her father with a most insulting and degrading offer. The vicar is a tenant and in debt to Richard, and is offered the alternative of imprisonment for debt or permitting his daughter to return to him. Naturally the old man won't listen to the scoundrel's words, and is arrested and carried off to the debtors' prison. Here he meets Richard's one-time accomplice, Jenkinson, and the two become very friendly. The vicar's family visit him in the prison and Jenkinson recognizes Olivia and becomes remorseful. Richard also visits the prison to taunt the old man, but is surprised to find his uncle on the scene. His uncle reproaches him for his conduct to his wife, but he maintains that she is not his wife, as the ceremony was a mock one But what a change comes over him when Jenkinson appears and produces the certificate and the priest who performed the ceremony. Richard is entirely overcome and beaten. Sir William, after paying the debt for which the vicar is being detained, escorts the old man and his family back to their home, where all is peace and happiness once more.

WARNER'S FEATURES.

THE SECRET MARRIAGE (Three parts).—Signor Corti, a promising tenor, gives singing lessons to Lydia, the daughter of the Marchioness of Belford. Their love for each other is soon discovered by the marchioness, and Corti is immediately dismissed. A letter found in Lydia's room by her brother, Robert, who has just returned from college, after completion of his medical studies, bears evidence of the fact that Lydia has left to join Corti. As a result her mother succumbs to an old affliction. Robert swears vengeance and gives up the hope of ever marrying Lucy Barker, his sweetheart, to pursue the tenor.

Corti and Lydia are secretly married and settle in a small country town. Annoyed by Lydia's jealousy, Corti accepts an offer to tour another country. Lydia is placed in a sanitarium to undergo treatment for nervousness, during his absence. Having been advised of her disappearance, Corti returns before fulfilling his engagements.

Robert, bent on avenging the seeming wrong done to his sister, Lydia, corners Corti, who furnishes evidence of his secret marriage to Lydia, and thus becomes Robert's friend. Corti accepts an invitation to a ball tendered by one of his friends. He is asked to sing, but cannot do so. A voice as though from heaven bids him sing, and immediately there is a dramatic meeting between husband and wife. Great is his joy when Robert is informed by his sister that she is the companion of Lucy Baker, his former sweetheart. Thereupon he announces his marriage.

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills

Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

Sargent's Photoplay Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

EDITORIAL

CHRISTMAS ALL THE TIME!

There comes a time in every year when we lay aside all thoughts of sordid commercialism, all considerations of profit and gain, and permit our minds to dwell upon more spiritual and sanctified principles.

The Yuletide season is all too short. The period of brotherly interest and reciprocal sympathy is entirely too brief. Why can't we practice the spirit of Christmas throughout the year?

In this industry especially, where we are all toiling on common grounds, where our interests are unified and our individual success greatly co-operative, there should be a stronger uniformity of purpose and effort.

Let our business religion be based on an ethical and equitable regard for each other, the trade in general, and its great army of supporters. With a personal and Christmassy sincerity, the Famous Players wish all the factors of the trade a very merry Xmas and an unusually happy New Year.

CECILIA LOFTUS IN "A LADY OF QUALITY," A ROMANTIC DRAMA

Indicative of the pretentious subjects selected for its program, The Famous Players release on January 1st the famous play and popular novel, "A Lady of Quality," by the noted authoress, Frances Hodgson Burnett, presenting for the first time in motion pictures the distinguished character actress, Cecilia Loftus.

A more suitable subject for Miss Loftus' mimic powers could hardly have been chosen. In the role of Clorinda, the headstrong, tempestuous hoyden whose father's contempt for the other sex extends even to herself, but who later wins his respect and grows up among his dissolute companions, learning to drink, smoke and swear as freely as any of them, till the derision of the man she loves at her masculine manners and dress prompts her to renounce them forever and become "A Lady of Quality," Miss Loftus has a capable part. One of the many strong climaxes of the story is introduced when Sir John Oxon, a dandy of London town, lays a wager with his bon vivants that he will win her heart, not as a hoyden, but as a woman. Upon his lips Clo bestows her first kiss, not without a price, for at that moment he steals one of her raven curls, the proof of his success. He hastens back to London to boast of his conquest while Clo waits in vain for his promised return, and then receives news that he is to wed a wealthy lady of title. This tragic episode changes all the rest of her life, which is traced through the film with an impressive charm and appeal.

GOSSIP

The trade journal critics visited the studio one day last week to review the release of Dec. 20th, "A Daughter of the Hills." If they publish half the nice things they said about this production, we may anticipate considerable eulogies.

At 11:45 A. M. Tuesday, the editor, thinking of news to fill this column, gazed through the window at the skies and saw a cloud pass the studio.

If we could tell you the stupendous plans we have for 1914 at this time you would probably throw away all the 1913 calendars, and mark every release day of 1914 with a red letter.

Miss Eva Unsell, a scenario writer of long and varied experience, has joined the scenario department of the Famous Players, where her original ideas of conception and technique will be placed to good advantage.

You don't have to hunt for houses using General Film Service—they are everywhere—on every hand—in every city and town in America—plentiful and prosperous.

They are PLENTIFUL because exhibitors have learned the value of films which set the standard of excellence in the industry and never vary except in the way of steady improvement—a service that has never failed to make its releases on the dates set for them, or to make its deliveries to exhibitors on time.

Facts and Comments

FROM a reverend gentleman in Nashville, Tennessee, we learn to our shock that "the moving picture shows of today are dark holes of vice and shame." Thus spoke the good man before the Baptist General Convention, and the newspaper informs us that "this declaration was greeted by a chorus of 'Amens' from the audience." If such an utterance had found its way from the lips of a clergyman four or five years ago, when ignorance about the motion picture was at its densest, we might have felt called upon to rise up and protest with all the energy at our command. Today we only feel a very sincere regret that an intelligent and responsible member of a great denomination writes himself down as the victim of an obsolete prejudice. The usefulness of the clergy is largely determined by their ability to keep in touch with the daily lives of the people and with human progress generally. It is a clergyman's duty to examine and to think before he talks. Ranting and denouncing never do any good. If the speaker has evidence of wrongdoing on the part of exhibitors, or if he has objections against any particular picture, it is his duty to be specific. If he cannot be specific it is far better for his own reputation if he preserves that discreet silence which is always a badge of wisdom.

Another instance of ecclesiastical intolerance is reported from another prominent town in the South. A Bishop of the Methodist church at a conference in Savannah, after launching into a denunciation of baseball expressed his disapproval of motion picture, and proudly declared: "I have never been to a motion picture show and I guess I will go down to my grave without seeing one." The bishop is doing himself an injustice. The motion picture is one of the greatest if not the greatest medium of imparting and diffusing knowledge. He surely would not be proud to announce the fact that "he never read a book and never would read one." The bishop, of course, knows that there are bad books, but he would by no means want to abolish the art of printing. For centuries man has tried in vain to reproduce motion. At last in this century he has succeeded. A new way has been found of reaching and impressing the human mind as it was never reached and impressed before. Why should a bishop take any pride in his ignorance of that fact? We do not wonder at the losses of the church when it is represented by men of such calibre. They are utterly out of sympathy with the real life of today and are owlishly content to live in the past.

THE expression is often heard, "The day of the motion picture is coming." This seems to us understating the facts. The day of the motion picture is here, the dawn of the day, at least, if not the blazing noon. Great theaters all through the land are introducing motion pictures in place of other attractions, and everywhere new theaters with enormous seating capacities are built for motion pictures exclusively. Newspapers, which but yesterday would not even deign to admit the existence of the motion picture, are today eager to learn and print all the important news in the motion picture field. Let us take stock of the past and impress the fact on ourselves that this unequaled progress is due to the high standards which have, on the whole, been maintained by the great producers both here and abroad. There were plenty of men who either in ignorance or greed wanted to drag the motion picture down to the level of the dime museum, the penny arcade and the shooting gallery, and who had no conception of the fact that a new art had been born. If the day of the motion picture has come, it is due to the producers who were enterprising and progressive enough to make their appeal to the best and not the worst instincts of human nature.

SOME time in the near future we hope to see a rational regulation of the admission of unaccompanied children into motion picture theaters. We are all agreed that the present law is in most States unreasonable and unfairly administered. Until this regulation has come to pass, we advise exhibitors everywhere to observe the present laws to the letter. A man who deliberately takes a chance and admits children under age can expect no sympathy if he gets fined. He is not entitled to any sympathy. He helps to give the exhibiting profession a bad name. At present the attitude of the New York courts is altogether hostile and prejudiced. A case of so-called "child-admission" is often determined before even a word of testimony is taken, and conviction is a moral certainty. Fines are getting heavier. The only conclusion to be drawn is that the exhibitor must comply literally with the law. The next step should be directed toward a proper change in the law. Unrestricted admission of children in certain hours and for certain programs has been suggested before, and it ought to be an easy matter to embody these suggestions in a law. Here is something well worth the while of the organized exhibitors everywhere.

No Sex Problems on the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE mania for airing and discussing sex problems from the housetops by means of megaphones seems to have hit the motion picture. The screen, of all mediums of expression, is far the least suitable for a display of this morbid publicity. It is not a question of whether this film is good and the other film is bad, the question is much broader than that. Does it benefit the good name of the motion picture to discuss these questions on the screen? Is any real good accomplished thereby? Does the undoubted evil outweigh the doubtful good?

There has long been a tendency in our modern life to dwell upon what is abhorrent and to paint not the rainbow but the details of the abattoir. This tendency which cannot be deplored too much crops out in the newspaper, in the magazine, in the pulpit, on the stage and at last even on the screen. Unquestionably the corruption of women is the worst offense against society and is tantamount to a poisoning of the well-springs of our national life. The law, and the men designated to enforce the law, can have no higher and no more imperative duty than to exterminate corruptors of women. Public sentiment is unanimous on this point and needs no prompting from stage or screen. The evil is known sufficiently well. Effective means are being taken by the states and by the nation to extirpate it and no more is needed. It may have been necessary to awaken the public conscience to a realization of the evil, but this work has now been done most thoroughly and the rest may be left to the officials who are responsible for the enforcement of the laws.

The continuous spreading of morbid details cannot be excused with the specious and overworked plea of conveying wholesome lessons.

The teaching of wholesome lessons is all right and is to be encouraged, but when the teaching process is inspired by the sole desire of making money we have every right to question the sincerity of the teachers. They must not complain when they are suspected of taking a far greater interest in their profits than in the wholesome lessons. Their teaching enthusiasm never carries these teachers away into distributing free tickets to the public. It may be true that a moral lesson goes with every ticket, but every ticket has to be paid for on the highly favorable terms of cash in advance. The plain truth is that these films to which the hideous name of "white slave traffic" has been given are intended to stimulate and exploit the morbid interest in the harrowing details of a sickening and revolting aberration of human souls.

The stage and the magazine have suffered in influence and in public esteem through too much exposure and wallowing in intimate descriptions. We would like to see the screen preserved from a similar loss of prestige and hence our protest.

It is, of course, always easy to get a crowd by a morbid appeal. All the best efforts of our civilization have ever been directed toward stifling and restraining the morbid impulses in human nature. Less than a century ago a public execution was regarded as a great public entertainment and a most precious lesson. We have advanced beyond such conceptions and while we still kill people by mandate of the law we no longer make a public spectacle of the killing. We have greater respect for the dignity of man. Our tastes, too, have changed for the better.

Any step backward is to be deplored. Within the last few months the police have repeatedly interfered with displays of morbidness on the stage. It is the earnest hope of all who love the motion picture that the screen will never stand in need of attention from the police.

The agitation against commercializing vice has brought forth a lot of self-appointed reformers who can see nothing but crimes and horrors and who are all too willing to describe them in most lavish detail. Editorial writers, contributors to magazines, a certain kind of ministers and all eminent sociologists are freely voting themselves into the cabinet of the Almighty. They want to make things over and improve on the work of the Creator. While the psalmists and poets of old broke forth into rapturous praise of the "ever glorious works" these men and women, with their eugenic theories and their rabid discussion of all sex questions, put on their glasses and critically shake their heads as they contemplate the government of the universe. These people themselves may be harmless enough, but their persistent and one-sided agitation draws all the morbid element in the community after them, even as carrion attracts the crows. The degenerates of both sexes who delight in following the salacious divorce trials and the sensational murder trials come out in full force, delighted with the scent of scandal. The scent is eagerly taken up by the yellow press, at present the most formidable and diabolical enemy of human progress. The most preposterous notions are set afloat to keep the discussion alive and the imagination of the readers is fed with horrible tales of missing women and young girls stupefied by mysterious hypodermic needles, etc. The contagion spreads amain and theatrical managers, who are not at all squeamish in their means of filling their show-houses, appeal to the same morbid sentiment by bringing the sex problem upon the stage. The papers are full of letters from disgusted readers voicing their protests. As one of them points out there has more social harm been done "by the breaking down of the barriers of decent reticence in mixed society than was ever done by the supposititious hypodermic needle of the abductor. The ill-devised among the reformers have reformed nothing and have grossly exaggerated the power and the skill of the tempters. The one thing needful now is to check the ravages of these reformrs, to suppress their shocking public exhibitions, to put the curb on the tongues of the heedless."

The consequences of all this ill-advised publicity are easily guessed. The moral miasma spreads. Popular imagination, always easily excited, is contaminated and debased. The evil sought to be suppressed by an excess of publicity grows and invades new fields.

Because nothing affects the imagination more powerfully than the picture in motion, we believe that the screen ought to be kept free from all discussion of sex problems under whatever guise presented. The false claim has been made that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who has financed a crusade against the corrupters of women, is back of these so-called white slave films. Mr. Rockefeller denies this absolutely, and is on record as deploring "this method of exploiting vice as not only injudicious but positively harmful."

He is quoted as saying that "no films have been based on our work with our approval and consent, we have not endorsed any moving picture shows or plays dealing with this subject now produced in this city and the use of my name in any such connection is absolutely unauthorized."

Romance and Idealism

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

ALMOST as soon as a young critic is pushed out of the nest and begins to hop around to provide for daily necessities, he sets up a standard that creative work in any form of art must be "true to life." True to whose life, and what life? So varied are its aspects in one or another grade of society, in this or that part of the world, that even the adventurous individual obtains only a glimpse of what is going on, hence that standard is mildly amusing when it is not farcical.

The best a novelist can do is to make a pretense of verisimilitude, use a little dialect or homely phrasing in conversation, hang a few faults on his characters, resort to homely description, or some other artifice from his bag of tricks. This is to keep up appearances with the publisher and impress those who imagine that the commonplace is synonymous with truth. The dramatist has a much harder time, even when he holds up grim features as the true physiognomy of existence.

Certain conventions have become so deeply rooted in theatrical presentation, and the people in front have become so long accustomed to them, that the art is not keeping pace with the general growth of intelligence. Moving pictures, on the other hand, enjoy a ready-made atmosphere of naturalness in exteriors and are better suited to the delineation of the actual than is any form of stage drama. Enjoying this advantage, there is no need of trying to force the obvious; hence they may portray life as the scenario writer sees it, particularly the more exciting episodes in the passing show and, in its new freedom, it seems particularly suited to reminding the world of life's noblest issues.

Realism that is what it pretends to be can only present the little that an author actually knows. Romance leads us from the dusty highroads of daily experience into idealistic achievement and poetic aspects of human character. The realistic author, in nearly all forms of story-telling, particularly that of the screen, is attracted by acts of crime when in search of exciting material. Hence the excess of plays dealing with primitive characters and lawbreakers. These are sometimes interesting when there is an ingenious plot, particularly in a detective story of high suspense, but the pistol and knockout drops can scarcely be called essentials in pictures of contemporary life, so small a part do they play in the struggle with which most of us are familiar.

Excess of realism may not only destroy interest by overemphasis of familiar details, but also by the repetition of sensational episodes until they become wearisome to the audience. The regular dose is pistol, drug and dropped letter until most of us are suffering from indigestion through lack of variety in the daily bill of fare.

The actual problems of business, politics and society do not so intimately concern criminology and are beyond the solving of those who evolve scenarios in the studio, but they at once become invested with new charm by idealization. There are magnificent possibilities for the photoplaywhight of democratic sympathy and thoughtful observation in the heroism of those who are attempting to overcome past errors of habit, who are taking an altruistic interest in their fellow-beings for the sake of this and the next generation, magnificent possibilities for the sincere.

To take any sort of a strong stand against the follies of our stupid adherence to old errors, wrong opinions and prejudices of ancient custom, an author must have courage and tact in convincing combination. He must feel deeply and honestly, constantly widen his view by study and personal contact with people, and recognize the value of romance in the treatment of his subject. Oh, for a Scott or a Dumas or a Hawthorne or a Stevenson of the screen portrayal! How we strained our eyes to read their romantic tales long after twilight, forgetting the world in which we lived, completely absorbed because of their charm of sympathy and poetic feeling!

The stage performance can never do what is within the natural scope of photodrama. It cannot go back into causes and sound dominant notes of human quality, those characteristc peculiarities which are only brought out with great pain, trouble and loss of time in the boxed performance. The screen portrayal, there being no intervening complication of language involved, can give a story all the dignity, beauty and intrinsic merit its fundamental idea may possess, film it in delicate textures of romance, intellectualize it by subtlety, or convey it in simpler terms than any language contains, its own being universal.

We have had a steady stream of realistic photoplays, murderously so, so much muddy and bloody melodrama, that an occasional whiff of beauty and romance is like going to the seaside in hot weather and inhaling fresh air from the ocean. Romance is atmosphere, and, where realism is odious, idealism animates and inspires us. I bring these terms into contrast because there is so much confusion about them. The producer who holds up some unpleasant phase of life to our view invariably claims it to be a true one—so is an ash cart or a dump heap.

Idealism must animate any art to illumine, beautify and deeply interpret the meanings and purposes of that art. Realism in which no idealism has been injected is a still picture, an exact photograph without the inspiring qualities of motion and emotion. Vitalize the photograph, vitalize the actual facts, idealize the real, and an inanimate art becomes a living thing. The truth nature makes visible may be plain and honest truth, but it is the invisible soul that poetry and romance make us feel, that stirs our hearts and sets our minds glowing with new thoughts.

The finest and final test of a screen story is not whether its scenes are true to life and its characters thoroughly natural, for the scenes may be true enough and unfit for the subject and the characters natural enough and so lacking in charm that we feel no interest in their fate. This old error of judgment has cramped and coarsened every art upon which it has been inflicted. Has the story revealed something spiritual, an idea that lives and breathes, a sentiment that grips the heart, a spark that sets the mind aflame? If it has none of these, it is not worth producing as a photodrama.

Genius at the starting point will carry no photodrama to success. The idea must be clearly set forth in the scenario; the director must have brains enough to grasp the subject matter, selective taste in picking the scenes, facilities for securing suitable types in the cast and logic enough to correctly measure the time accorded to each scene. The drama must be properly set, rehearsed and acted, and even then photography may spoil it all, but no part of it need be undertaken, no success is possible, if the story is destitute of ideals.

Suggestions to Mr. Mitchel

AS the time for the inauguration of John Purroy Mitchel as Mayor of the City of New York approaches, public interest increases in the first important act devolving upon him, namely, the appointment of his staff of assistants, the heads of the various departments of the city government. Regarding the men who are to compose the Mayor's cabinet, Mr. Mitchel has, thus far, kept his own counsel as is his right, but as it is a cherished American privilege to offer advice to duly elected executives, one of our most popular "indoor sports," we might say, we trust that a word or two in the way of suggestion in behalf of the motion picture interests, coming from THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, will not be considered out of place at this time.

When Mr. Mitchel bespoke the suffrage of his fellow-citizens, he was taken at his word by a handsome majority—the greatest that has ever been accorded to any previous candidate for the office of chief magistrate of New York city. This was sufficient evidence that the people believed that he would make good all his promises in so far as power to do so reposed in him. But experience has taught us that the best intentioned efforts have been set at nought when, as in the task that confronts the Mayor of this great city, much of that power is of necessity delegated to others. It is, therefore, well understood that the success of the coming administration depends largely, very largely, upon the ability of the men who are to be appointed to take charge of the several departments of the city government.

It is concerning some of these appointments that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD desires to speak in behalf of the industry it represents; but, before going further into the matter, we desire to emphasize the fact that we urge no candidates for any office, that we have no axe to grind. Our one request is that, in appointing men who are to exercise authority over motion picture interests, Mayor Mitchel shall select men without set notions regarding the conduct of picture theaters; men who are open-minded and broad enough to grasp conditions as they are and to administer the law as it stands with a liberal interpretation.

If Mayor Mitchel's administration is to be successful it must not be handicapped with faddists who recognize in their appointment a heaven-given opportunity to make nuisances of themselves and of the administration a burden to the people. This has happened before.

It is not with apprehension that we recall Mr. Mitchel's express promise to the motion picture men of New York that he would "carry out the policies of Mayor Gaynor" in his attitude to their business, but rather with belief in his sincerity. More than that the picture men of New York would be unreasonable to ask. With that promise in mind we feel confident that every deserved consideration will be accorded their interests; that petty acts of oppression will be discountenanced, that the levying of graft will be effectually stamped out and that the picture theater owner may be permitted to conduct his lawful business in peace and comfort.

All that the late Mayor Gaynor secured for the motion picture men was wrested by force from a greedy, conscienceless cabal in the Board of Aldermen. It was a great victory, but it was not complete. To Mayor Mitchel will fall the task of finishing a work so well begun. Approximately eight hundred picture theaters provide a wholesome diversion to more than five hundred thousand people every day of the year in Greater New York. The safeguarding of business and social interests so great as are therein combined calls for the exercise of something more than a perfunctory administration of the law; it calls, as well, for common sense.

We believe that Mayor Mitchel will give to the motion picture interests the time and thought their magnitude deserves.

"Ben Bolt"

An Acceptable Three-Part Feature by the Solax Company Based on Famous Song.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS three-reel Solax feature has many points of merit. The producer has gone to some trouble in getting the real atmosphere and has, I think, succeeded well. The plot is not exactly built on the old poem, which won added fame through being introduced into "Trilby," indeed, there is little more than the name of the old poem, but the plot furnished by the author of the feature is entirely acceptable and is up to the general Solax standard, which is high. There is a real old mill for which the producer went to New London, there are fine maritime scenes taken on the coast of Rhode Island and there is, of course, the pretty scenery of the Palisades.

The story is easily followed. Alice Lee, the daughter of a prosperous merchant, is sought in marriage by Ben Bolt. Alice favors him and spurns the advances of a rival. Through a trick of the rival, Ben Bolt is made to appear as a quarrelsome drunkard and Alice's father drives him from the house. Alice is still true to her lover who sails away to Newfoundland. It so happens that he finds a trace of a lost ship that had belonged to Alice's father. He succeeds in saving ship and crew. After many adventures he returns home.

In the meantime, Alice's father has suffered reverses in business. He indignantly rejects the offer of Bolt's rival, who wants him to accept his aid upon the condition of Alice marrying him. Bolt comes to the rescue of the father of Alice, preparations are made for a great wedding when the rival, with a trio of hired villains, waylays and overpowers Bolt, who was on his way to the church. The villains tie Bolt to a spoke in the wheel of the old mill, the water is turned on and the wheel threatens destruction to the faithful lover of Alice. At this moment the funny man of the village discovers the villainy and Ben Bolt is saved. The villains are still on the warpath, however, and steal Ben Bolt's ship. Again they are seen by the village clown and a most exciting pursuit on the water follows. The pirates are caught, the rightful owner and his friends attack them, win back their ship, and bring the villains to condign punishment. It all ends very happily. The father of Alice regains his fortune and Ben Bolt wins the desire of his heart.

"Satan's Castle" (Two Reels—Ambrosio).

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

A very pretty story is told in this Ambrosio feature. The first scene is one which has ever been a favorite with painters. A shepherd is seen tending his flock beside a ruined castle. The old shepherd, a picturesque and interesting figure, is asked by some tourists why the ruined castle bears the name of "Satan's Castle." He then tells the story on the screen.

A wicked gambler in the days of long ago, having lost all he had, made a bargain with Satan. It was the usual bargain, the gambler was to have all the glories and pleasures of this world and after that he was to be the servant of the fiend forevermore. Enthroned by Satan as the lord of a magnificent castle and set in dominion over all the people for miles around, the gambler proves a tyrant of the worst type. He oppresses the peasantry, violates the daughters of the poor and defies God and man with his awful orgies and crimes.

In the progress of the action the aroused peasants assault the castle of the wicked lord. They land at the foot of a huge mountain which falls precipitately into the sea. The ascent of the steep mountain side, the overpowering of the sentinels, and the punishment of the wicked lord form many scenes of both beauty and action. The devil appears to claim his due and the victims of the oppressors are rescued. The feature has all the good qualities of an Ambrosio release and will commend itself especially to exhibitors looking for a pretty little classic.

NO "AMERICAN" RELEASE ON CHRISTMAS.

There will be no release on Thursday, December 25th, by the "Flying A" Company, but instead will be a two reel subject on Monday, December 22nd, title, "The Shriner's Daughter."

A Christmas Message

FOR MORE than nineteen hundred years the message of Good Will Among Men has been echoing back to the Heavens whence it came. Never in the march of the centuries has the echo resounded clearer than now in the last days of this year 1913. The hostile forces which have divided the earth and separated and estranged the minds of men are being conquered slowly but irresistibly. Even the briefest glance at the history of the human race must convince us that the spirit of tolerance, the Twin Brother of Good Will, has made more progress in the last century than ever before and that it is still striding onward. All this has been achieved through the appeal to the human mind, and there is no appeal which measures up to the psychic force of the picture in motion.

The channels of perception run mainly from the eye into the mind, and nothing informs the eye so well as the picture. The impression is direct and instantaneous and at the same time more vivid and lasting than the recollection of the printed page. The motion picture has unlocked the treasure house of knowledge with a thousand keys. Everywhere the motion picture with its universal grammar awakens sympathy from man to man and from nation to nation. Never before in the history of the human race has there been such an enlightening force with the earth for its field. On the day when we renew our troth with Heaven it is well to pause in the pursuit of our daily work and fill anew the founts of inspiration. Humanly speaking, the motion picture is in the keeping of all who are actively devoted to the art. They are the trustees and administrators. Their accounting must be to the whole human family because the motion picture is to be used for the benefit of all mankind.

"In the Firelight" (American)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE pathetic poem of Marc Edmund Jones, "In the Firelight," has furnished the story for an affecting two reel subject by the American Film Manufacturing Company. Company number two at Santa Barbara, under the direction of Thomas Ricketts, has been employed in the production.

Mr. Ricketts has again proved his fine artistic skill by retaining the poetic value of the poem while bringing out its dramatic value in a way that grips and appeals to us. A harsher method would have revealed scenes that would tend to harrow our nicer sensibilities, instead of creating an atmosphere of sympathy around the simple country girl, who has been deceived by a polished city scamp.

Mr. Ricketts has also succeeded admirably in making the interior light effects assist him in his chosen plan. The happy evening hours of the old farmer and the adopted children, whom he has rescued from waifdom, kindle a mellow glow in our hearts as we watch them in front of the blazing hearth. The evening prayer, in which all three engage before retiring, wafts its hallowed incense upon us, opening wide the floodgates of memory and bearing each soul back to the rainbowed country, in which clean-hearted youth lives in blissful ignorance of the gross, heartless, outside world.

Scene from "In the Firelight" (American).

Ned, the adopted son of the old farmer, Abner, requires three people to represent him; the adopted daughter, Nell, the same number. At the age of twenty-five, the part of Ned is played by Ed. Coxen, and Nell, at the age of twenty-three, is impersonated by Miss Charlotte Burton. Both characterizations merit praise. Especially does Mr. Coxen deserve mention for his well conceived type of the clean-minded young man on the farm. It is to his credit that he always submerges himself in the part of the country bumpkin. William Bertrand is really a joy to the eye as old Abner, and George Field is seen to advantage in the role of the city scamp.

Old Abner, as the curtain rises, is seen sleeping in his big arm chair beside the blazing hearth. He is dreaming of twenty years ago, when he was left alone to mourn the loss of his wife and children. Then the pictures show how he adopted Ned and Nell, who are now the jewels of his household.

In the midst of the home happiness of the three, a handsome stranger from the city chances to ride past the farmhouse. He halts his horse beside Nell in the roadway to ask for information, and is immediately impressed by her sweet, rustic beauty. She, in turn, is smitten by the good-looking stranger. He remains in the neighborhood for a time, and there are clandestine meetings with Nell. Ned, who loves Nell, learns of these trysts, but remains silent.

The stranger tries to induce Nell to go away with him to the city, but she persuades him to go with her to Abner and ask for her hand. Abner eyes the stranger sternly and refuses, commanding him to leave the house and the neighborhood. Then Nell steals away from the old home and accompanies the stranger to the city.

Months pass, and no word from Nell breaks the silence. Abner then sends Ned to find her. "Stay till you do," he instructs him. More weary months pass and Abner hears not a word from either of his adopted children. Ned, true to his promise, has determined not to return without Nell. He meets the stranger one day, but is easily overcome by his wiles and fails to find a clue to the whereabouts of his old playmate.

Scene from "In the Firelight" (American).

One day the climax of Nell's woe is reached when the stranger forsakes her. She proudly refuses his money and goes out in the big city to end it all. But the glow from the firelight of the old hearth comes back to her memory and she turns away from the dark waters of the river. That same night she encounters Ned, and he succeeds in taking her back to the old house, where Abner is praying:

> "O God! Thou, through this firelight > Canst draw my children back tonight."

"They will come back," he said, as he placed the burning lamp in the window. And when they came soon afterwards and he had clasped the wanderer to his heart, "In the fire's gleam came peace and rest."

The release date is December 29.

PICTURES LOST EN ROUTE.

James Bryson, manager of the Minneapolis office of the Laemmle Film Service, writes to the Moving Picture World to ask the trade to assist him in recovering a shipment of pictures lost en route from the Laemmle Des Moines office to H. Midland, Hartley, Iowa. The express agent forgot to drop the package containing the pictures at Hartley and it was carried on to Minneapolis, at which point it disappeared. In the consignment was a two-reel Bison feature entitled "The Snake." The express company is putting the burden of the loss on the express agent, who can ill afford to pay the price. Should anyone locate the lost pictures it is requested that they communicate with the Laemmle Film Service at either Minneapolis or Des Moines.

WORLD SPECIAL TAKES OVER PASQUALI "POMPEII."

E. Mandelbaum, president of the World Special Films Corporation, has just completed an arrangement whereby he assumes full control of the Pompeii Film Company, acquiring all rights for the United States and Canada of the Pasquali version of "The Last Days of Pompeii." From now on, this eight-reel feature will be handled exclusively through the branch offices of the World Special Films Corporation as one of its features. The success with which the branch offices are meeting in booking this film throughout the United States is very big, showing the favor with which the exhibitor looks upon the big special feature subjects.

The Adventure of the Actress' Jewels

First Story of an Edison Amateur Detective Series—Many Delightful Comedy Situations.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS bright story, by Frederic Arnold Kummer, is almost unique among present day screen comedies, inasmuch as it does not force the obvious, neither the tale nor its telling thrusting the joke upon the audience. I believe it was Aristotle who pointed out some 2300 years ago that mental activity of the free and artistic kind is one of the greatest joys accorded the human race. But the average director is in a state of lingering distress about the intellectuality of the audience, fears that people can not think and undertakes to do the thinking for them, thus intruding upon their privilege of seeing the point for themselves.

The first adventure of Octavius, amateur detective, gives the hint and leaves the rest to the people in front, and that is the true comedy idea.

Scene from "The Adventure of the Actress' Jewels" (Edison).

Octavius is a young man of suddenly-inherited fortune, with a twist in his cerebral convolutions brought on by reading detective stories, and he sets out to solve fascinating problems of crime, just as people write scenarios, without any special equipment of talent or experience suited to the vocation. The way he attains his aim suggests the reverse inference of what has been intended and a laugh is not only raised by his stupidity but by cleverly contrived circumstances which transform his anticipated failure into unexpected success. That his utter foolishness should bring about his triumph reveals a process of double ridicule, in which the average detective story is delicately satirized. The spectator takes part in the work presented to him, hence his true enjoyment of the play.

Octavius is not long in possession of his unearned increment before he notices an article in one of the daily papers about the theft of jewels from a noted actress. The article in question is part of a publicity game, the work of an insidious press agent, but Octavius visits the actress in his new role, and she is compelled to hide her jewels and show him the empty case in confirmation of her agent's story. Octavius reassures her—"Trust me, Madame. Octavius never yet has failed," being his slogan. He recalls after leaving her that he has no clue to work on and goes back to borrow the jewel box. Meanwhile, she has restored her jewels to the box. Octavius slips in, takes the box and leaves a note of explanation, appending his address. Two real thieves break in and read the note. They follow the clue Octavius has left behind and break into his rooms while he is examining a finger print, his own, on the box—he is unaware that the jewels are within the case.

The actress finds that her jewels have been really taken, summons the police and sets out for the home of Octavius. He is attacked and bound by the thieves, and they are on the point of making a clean getaway when the police, followed by the actress, break in, and a complicated state of affairs results. But for the fact that Octavius inadvertently carried away the treasure the actress would have lost it, and, when all is explained, when the professionals are placed under arrest, the amateur detective is highly complimented upon the stratagem by which he defeated the purposes of the real criminals.

Robert Brower

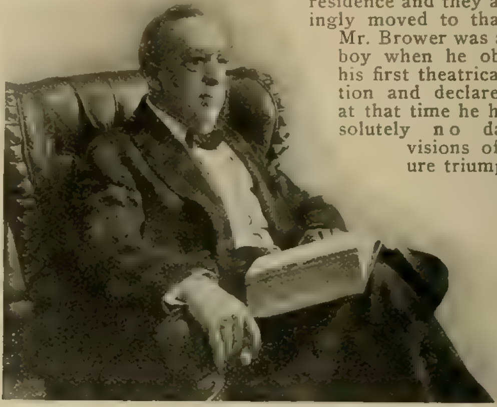
"I came to the Edison studio as a visitor and was so fascinated by the immensity and complexity of the work, and the painstaking attention to the minutest details, that I determined to become a part of this remarkable organization." Thus it was that Robert Brower, after spending almost fifty years in the theatrical profession, joined the Edison photoplayers. And there is in his action that which savors of the conduct of a certain gentleman who sighed for more worlds to conquer, for Mr. Brower has occupied every position that the "legitimate" stage can offer.

Born in Point Pleasant, N. J., he soon persuaded his parents that New York was a far more desirable place of residence and they accordingly moved to that city. Mr. Brower was a mere boy when he obtained his first theatrical position and declares that at that time he had absolutely no dazzling visions of future triumphs, of re-creating Shakespeare or of becoming the greatest actor in the world. Perhaps that is true, but one must admit that mere dramatic talent could never elevate a man to the position which Mr. Brower has held.



Robert Brower.

He numbers among his former associates, Edwin Forrest, Edwin Booth, Charlotte Cushman, Adelaide Nielson, Lawrence Barrett, E. L. Davenport, and others whose names are writ large on the scroll of theatrical fame. For five years he was manager for J. H. Stoddard in "The Bonnie Briar Bush" and acted in the same capacity for Frederick Ward and Lewis James, the famous tragedians. He spent the two years previous to his engagement at the Edison studio, managing William Hodge in the great Liebler success "The Man from Home." In his managerial capacity he was one of the originators of the excellent plan of putting the cast on the program in the order in which they appear upon the stage.

When Mr. Brower became a photoplayer three years ago he proceeded with his characteristic thoroughness to study the technicalities of make-up and action before the camera and if it be permissible to speak of reducing art to a science, he has done so, in the sense that he has mastered the expression of the whole range of emotion in the very limited space and time which the camera affords. There is in his action a positive force and convincing realism which shows clearly that Mr. Brower's characterizations are drawn from real life—from the innumerable types which a keen observer has culled from the great mass of humanity encountered during a life of unusual activity.

After studying the motion picture from every point of view, Mr. Brower was convinced that the most effective story was that which contained a simple theme with a strong heart interest. As a result, he wrote the beautiful dramatic photoplay "The Harbinger of Peace," the tremendous popularity of which has more than proven the excellence of the author's judgment.

BLANCH SWEET WITH MUTUAL.

Blanch Sweet, the beautiful young motion picture actress, who as leading lady for the Biograph Company has become one of the best known stars in the screen world, has signed a contract to appear exclusively in motion pictures. As a star in Mutual photoplays, Miss Sweet will again be under the direction of D. W. Griffith, who schooled her in her art and staged most of the dramas in which she has appeared. Although Miss Sweet is only nineteen years of age, she is recognized as one of the greatest emotional actresses in the silent drama.

Mutual Girl Series.

Mutual Players with Norma Phillips in the Leading Role To Do a Serial Fashion Picture.

GOOD Morning; here's something new in the picture line, now that serial motion picture productions have become popular, and it is strictly a woman's series, too. It is also "good morning" for the dainty little woman who is to carry the burden of the leading part, but, from what they tell us about this new series, that burden will be one that almost any woman would delight to bear.

To be exact the "Mutual Girl" series is to be a fashion subject and Miss Phillips is to have the great pleasure of wearing "some clothes." In the role of "Our Mutual Girl," Miss Phillips is the girl from the country who comes to New York to play at the society game. Of course, it is not every girl from the country who would be able to get into the swim just as Miss Phillips will show us in the pictures, but the series will be illustrative and afford a splendid opportunity to do just what is proposed—show the smart clothes of smart people, worn at different functions and at different times of the day.

It is one thing to have the clothes and quite another to know how to wear them. Here it is that Miss Phillips proves her right to the part she is to play in these pictures. We have tried to give our readers some idea of how fine feathers look when properly worn in the engravings on this page, posed expressly for the Moving Picture World. How would you like to say "good morning" to the dainty dream in white as it emerged from its boudoir and stood greeting you against a background of blackest velvet which accentuated every graceful line? Looks mighty simple, but if you had to foot the bill that creation cost—a matter of several hundred dollars—you would appreciate what it means to be happy though single.

While it is not the purpose of the Mutual folks to boost the dressmakers' bills of our wives and daughters, they believe that no harm will come to us, and not a little pleasure, if they show us in pictures, what it means to be well dressed from the standpoint of a woman.

Along with the dress feature, "Our Mutual Girl" is to have an opportunity to meet celebrities in every walk of life and appear in the pictures with them. Under the chaperonage of "her rich New York auntie" she will meet the people who are really worth while and hob nob with them for the benefit of Mutual patrons all over the world. Already she has met a number of social "lions" and the results have been very gratifying.

Speaking about the cost of clothes, here are a few of the items that figure in the making of the Mutual Girl series: stockings, $20; shoes, $15; lingerie at $50 per garment, gowns at $150 to $400, wraps at the same figures, furs at $300 a set, hats, $75, and gloves, six pairs for each picture at $4 per pair. To insure that the "Girl" shall be properly dressed in these gorgeous gowns a dressmaker has been employed at a cost of $75 per week to keep her "duds" in order and "hook up the back" or tell her if her "hat is on straight"—all very important trifles to a well dressed woman. She will ride about in a $6700 motor car attended by a footman and driven by a chauffeur whose combined salaries is $300 per month. By this one can form a conclusion that the "Girl" and her outfit is quite up to the minute.

That Miss Phillips is enjoying her experiences goes without saying. It would be difficult to find the young woman who would not extract some pleasure from such an opportunity. To her the Paris creations "are just too sweet for words" and it must be admitted that she wears them with becoming grace, expressing that girlish demurity we expect to see in a young boarding school miss who is making her first bow to the big world of society.

Of course, there must be a young man in every picture to make it more real. For this role the Mutual has engaged Thomas Mills, who has appeared in Reliance pictures for the past year. He was an actor of recognized ability before he joined the Reliance players and his work has shown to good advantage on the screen. While clothes on a man do not make quite the sensation that they do on a woman, yet Mr. Mills is fast becoming a "Beau Brummell" of the pictures; quite a distinction since it is difficult to find men who can wear clothes with distinction.

Taken altogether, the Mutual Girl series promises to become popular as it is unusual, and we look to see the idea gain considerable vogue among picture enthusiasts everywhere.

The Censorship Battle

Clever Tactics by the Opponents of Censorship—The Way Is Paved for an Appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States—The Lessons of the Struggle in Ohio.

By W. Stephen Bush.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 16th, 1913.

THE State of Ohio is the great battle field in the war for the freedom of the screen. The final briefs and affidavits have just been submitted and, while the court is considering these, and until it hands down its decision, the exhibitor in Ohio is protected against any action by the so-called Censor Board, for the court has granted a temporary restraining order which has been served on the attorney general.

Just when the decision of the court may be expected no one can tell. There is an impression that the judges will be heard from before the first day of the coming year, but I have been unable to discover any ground for this belief. The three judges are busy with their regular calendars and, as the issues involved in the test of the constitutionality of this censorship law go to the very roots of our fundamental law, and as the judges seemed deeply impressed with this fact on the oral argument, it may be weeks before a decision will be reached.

If the battle in Ohio had no significance beyond the state borders, the whole subject might be dismissed with a few paragraphs. The fact is that the decision will go a long way toward settling the legal status of the motion picture in every part of the country. The proceedings thus far had, and all the details of the great legal battle, are, therefore, of the highest possible interest to every person who is directly or indirectly engaged in the producing, distributing or exhibiting of motion pictures.

If the decision of the Federal Court goes against the motion picture interests, we may expect the censoring mania to crop out in many other states and to cause irreparable damage to every branch of the industry. It is reported that the possibilities of graft in motion picture censoring has made no small impression on the politicians of adjacent states and that censorship bills, patterned after the Ohio law, are to be introduced in the legislatures of West Virginia, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin.

If, on the other hand, the decision of the Federal judges goes against the censorship law, this greatest menace to the industry will receive a blow from which it will never recover. While the granting of an interlocutory injunction will not mean the final disposition of motion picture censorship, it is not likely that any village, town, city, county, or state will seek to impose the yoke of censorship on motion pictures while the whole subject is under consideration of the United States Supreme Court.

The Order of Battle.

To understand the situation, we must at the outset lay hold of the fact that the opponents of censorship have made their appeal to the Federal Courts—to be exact—to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. The appeal to the Federal jurisdiction has been made under a new Federal law, which had only been enacted a few months before this fight against censorship was begun. This new law provides that the constitutionality of any state law may be questioned before three Federal judges of the proper district, one of whom must be a member of the Circuit Court of Appeals. The three judges may, in their discretion, grant an interlocutory injunction and an appeal from their decision lies directly to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The question now before the three judges is whether an interlocutory injunction shall issue. The preliminary restraining order now in force will be vacated as soon as their decision comes. If an interlocutory injunction is granted, as prayed for by the opponents of censorship, the question as to whether a permanent injunction is to issue will then be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. The bringing of the suit in the Federal Courts was the result of much careful deliberation on the part of the opponents of the censorship law, it has broadened the scope of the question and has removed the contest from the altogether undesirable atmosphere of Ohio state politics.

The Men Behind the Guns.

In the office of the Mutual Film Company, an Ohio corporation located at 106 Prospect Avenue, Cleveland, there sat, in the early summer of this year, one of those gray headed young men who abound in vital energy. This young man was one, J. E. Hennessy, and he was, and still is, intimately connected with the management of the Mutual Film Company. He had been active in the film business mostly in the West and in the South. Next to his energy, the utter fearlessness of the man is the most striking characteristic. While all the exchangemen and exhibitors in the state of Ohio were fearful of the law which had just been passed, censoring all motion pictures and allowing only what was, in the judgment of two men and one woman, "moral, educational, amusing and harmless," Hennessy came to the conclusion that such a law would paralyze the industry in Ohio and everywhere else, and that it was incumbent upon him to defeat the law. In a quiet way he took counsel with the leading lawyers of Ohio and neighboring states and all told him that the law of censorship would not stand if it were attacked in the courts.

In the meantime, the time for the enforcement of the law was drawing nearer every day and every other exchange in Ohio, big and little, had began to submit its films to the censors for examination and approval. The censors were knocking at the door of the Mutual Film Company. Hennessy stood firm; he had decided that he would not allow them to look at an inch of Mutual film and just as the censors and the industrial commission, which is the parent of the censors, were ready to train their heavy guns on the busy place at 106 Prospect Avenue, they heard that one of the Federal judges in Cleveland, Day, had been asked for an order restraining them from further action. Hennessy had been in touch with his home office and Mr. H. E. Aitken, the president of the Mutual; he had received assurances of unlimited support and had retained one of the leading law firms in the middle west, Squires, Sanders and Dempsey. Judge Day was impressed by the argument of the attorney for the Mutual and a stipulation was entered into between the representative of the attorney general and the lawyers of the Mutual, to suspend the operation of the law until Judge Warrington, a member of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and Judge Killits could come to Cleveland and hear the application for interlocutory relief.

The Oral Argument.

Upon the day of the oral argument before Judges Warrington, Killits and Day, the Mutual Film Company was represented by a most formidable array of counsel. More remarkable, however, than even the array of counsel was the deep and lively interest taken by the judges in the argument. They declared their desire for full information early in the hearing and listened from 9:30 A. M. to 2:30 P. M. without a recess. It was another and most notable instance of the fascination of the motion picture.

While Attorney W. N. Seligsberg, of New York, gave an account of the origin and the development of the motion picture, and described in detail the process of manufacture, the judges listened most intently. When one of the Cleveland attorneys for the Mutual cited the late Mayor Gaynor's veto message and said he would offer it in evidence only it was not technically authenticated, the judges suggested to the representative of the attorney general's office that he waive any technical objection, which he agreed to and the judges took the veto message.

At the end of the argument, Judge Day declared that he had no doubt that irreparable loss and damage would follow to the complainants, the Mutual Film Co. and the Mutual Film Corporation, if the censorship law were enforced and afterwards declared void. He, therefore, signed the restraining order which is still in force. At the argument, the court, in its eagerness for the facts, called one of the censors, J. A. Maddox, to the stand and he was asked about the work done by the censorship board. The argument of the young man from the office of the attorney general, in reply to the attacks on the censorship law, was brief and did not go into any of the salient points at issue.

A Summary of the Briefs of Both Sides.

The brief submitted by the attorneys for the Mutual some days after the oral argument places its attack upon the law of censorship on many grounds. It contends that motion pictures are publications within the most comprehensive meaning of the term.

A case is cited from the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court where a painting was held to be a publication. The legislature of Ohio, it is claimed, had no right to abridge or restrain the freedom of publication. This argument is elaborated at great length.

Great stress is also laid on the decision of the Ohio courts to the effect that no one can conform to a law, which fixes no definite standards for the granting of a certain license or privilege. The provision in the old Roberts law, leaving the licensing of a steam engineer to the arbitrary judgment of an inspector, who was to determine whether an applicant was competent and trustworthy, is compared to the provision in the censorship law which makes two men and one woman the judges of what is moral.

The brief says further: "Unless this court is prepared to say that Ohio could pass a law providing for the censorship of newspapers and magazines, it cannot sustain the censorship of motion pictures."

Great stress is also laid on the alleged usurpation of power on the part of the state of Ohio in seeking to interfere with interstate commerce, the regulation of which belongs entirely to congress. It is claimed that the censorship act is unconstitutional because no state can impose or levy imposts on goods shipped through the state except for the purpose of inspection, all revenues derived by the state from such inspection cannot be used for state purposes except to cover the cost of inspection, all excess must be covered into the Treasury of the United States. It is pointed out that the cost of the censor board will not exceed $4,500 per annum, while the revenues would in the first year probably exceed $25,000.

The brief submitted by the Attorney General Timothy Hogan, dwells at great length on the police power of the state. It quotes from a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court which reads as follows: "It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs * * * It may be put forth in aid of what may be sanctioned by usage or held by the prevailing morality or strongest opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare." The brief of the attorney general is much shorter than the brief of the complainants.

The Exhibitor Pays.

Exchanges in Cleveland have so far paid over two thousand dollars to the censor board for their fees at the rate of a dollar a reel. Just now no exchange in Cleveland submits its films to the board, for, although the restraining order technically protects only the clients of the Mutual, other managers have taken a stand and, barring an occasional feature man, no fees are coming for the support of the censor board from Cleveland. The exhibitors here realize that the tax of censorship will in the end come out of their pockets and that is why they are almost unanimously opposed to censorship. Out of two score exhibitors whom I spoke to on the subject, not one had one word to say in favor of the censorship law. Credit is freely given to the Mutual for the stand it has taken. Mr. Hennessy and Mr. Christenson, also of the Mutual, report a decided increase in their business since taking their stand on the censorship law. They have not had a single cancellation of service since the opening of the fight. Indeed, a dozen exhibitors or more proffered financial assistance and one exhibitor insisted on contributing a good sized check, but all these offers were declined with thanks.

Exhibitors here are well posted not only on the developments of the Mutual fight, but on the dangers of censorship generally. The censorship law has caused a split among the organized exhibitors in Cleveland. The enemies of censorship have started a separate organization and claim a membership of fifty-four, while the organized friends of the censor law are said to have a membership of but seven. There are, probably, over 130 exhibitors in Cleveland and about 750 in the entire state of Ohio.

In my next article I hope to be able to describe the sentiments of exhibitors all through the state and to draw a picture of the personnel and the working methods of the Ohio Board of Censors.

CECILIA LOFTUS AS A FAMOUS PLAYER.

Cecilia Loftus, prominent stage star, will make her screen debut on January 1 in the Famous Players' production of "A Lady of Quality," from the book of Frances Hodgson Burnett. The play is an idyllic blending of the romance, beauty and daring of the days of knighthood, and the camera has brought out the color and warmth of a picturesque period. Miss Loftus has the role of Clorinda, the headstrong, tempestuous hoyden whose father's contempt for the other sex extends even to his own daughter, who after acquiring the paternal habit of drinking, smoking and even a leaning to profanity, returns in the end to her proper station of a lady of quality. There are many strong situations in the picture. which will be presented with all the accessories the Famous Players throw about their productions.

CALIFORNIA M. P. CO. WILL PRODUCE DRAMA.

The California Motion Picture Corporation, producer of the "Golden Gate Weekly," will start in on extensive dramatic productions. The plans of the company, as outlined by the management, include the whole range of dramatic motion picture possibilities. The first studio will be located in the immediate vicinity of San Francisco. Several artists of long established reputation have been secured and others are being added as rapidly as possible. The company has plans for several large productions already well in hand.

"Jerry's Uncle's Namesake"

Two-Reel Vitagraph Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS comedy is so bright and original in treatment that the author deserves mention—her name is given as Mrs. Russel—but the source of energy it taps is very largely expended through Sidney Drew, with a large portion of his own added. Whatever has been accumulating in him during his Vitagraph performances is here liberated, and it must have been quite a surplus—his activities are enormous as a childless young married man with a rich uncle. The babyless Drew gets into trouble, as many of us do about this time of the year, through buying Christmas presents.

He is one of those doll-dressing husbands who take a lively interest in helping wifey select becoming clothes, the same man who knows exactly how a steak should be cooked—perhaps you have met him. He trots along when his wife goes to have a gown fitted, and he becomes interested in the dressmaker's baby. He concludes to surreptitiously purchase some gifts for the tiny one and is observed by a gossipy friend. A story rapidly circulates that these purchases were made for his own child, and a local paper announces, by way of a scoop, that he has become the proud father of a promising boy.

Scene from "Jerry's Uncle's Namesake" (Vitagraph).

The fine constructive note struck at the beginning of this play is that of expectancy, a feeling in advance that some amusing situations are to follow, with a surprise in the end. The kindling of belief that something unusual is going to happen is a very essential portion of the art, but what is to follow must not be obvious. In this particular case, we can foresee all sorts of complications for Drew, particularly as he is a politician. The notice that he is a proud father is published along with a copy of a speech he has made, and he innocently assists in circulating the news by sending copies of the paper to all his friends.

Among those who receive a copy of the paper is a rich bachelor uncle, who writes at once that he will give his nephew a present of a thousand dollars if the boy is named after him. Drew consults his wife, impersonated by Louise Beaudet, and they conspire to get the money by sending uncle a photo of the dressmaker's baby. Uncle likes the photo so well that he decides to deliver the check in person, and the childless couple are compelled to borrow the dressmaker's baby. All goes well with this scheme. Uncle pays the check, falls in love with the child, even tracing a strong resemblance to the father, and is sorry to leave. Drew rushes him into an automobile to catch his train and the real mother recovers her loaned baby.

The cheerful liars have been skating on thin ice all this while, but the worst is yet to come. Uncle barely misses the train and decides to stay over another day and play with the little creature who has been named after him. The dressmaker has been called away, and her child is no longer available for the deception. What happens may be guessed by some keen wits, but only half guessed at that. One funny situation is succeeded by another until the average audience will be in an uproar. Ludicrous as are the incidents themselves, Drew intensifies them with every variety of grimace and posture from trapezium to polyhedron. He is a veritable king's jester, with a natural keen grasp of the humorous added. "The comedy suits the actor, and the actor well suits the comedy."

"The Daughter of the Hills."

Laura Sawyer Gives Us a Charming Interpretation in a Finely Staged Three-Part Famous Players' Production.

By George Blaisdell.

It is a pleasure to record a picture that while spectacular in its staging also contains a real story, one of human interest, and simple and convincing. Here is a girl of the hills who falls in love with a gladiator, and as his wife goes with him to Rome. There she sees him in combat slaughter his opponent; her love turns to abhorence. The gladiator cannot understand such a situation; yet later when he is summoned to the arena, on penalty of the forfeiture of his possessions, he decides to take his wife and go back to the hills, her hills, where he first saw her. There is the whole story. It interests from the beginning. Laura Sawyer, as the daughter of the hills, has done no better work than she gives us in this three-part production of the Famous Players. In the love passages she will charm the beholder as she did the gladiator. So she will as the wife in the Roman palace, where, surrounded by luxury and attendants, she remains the simple, unaffected girl of the hills.

Scene from "The Daughter of the Hills" (Famous Players).

There are many scenes that will rivet the attention. At the opening, Floria is shown tending her sheep. It is thus that the gladiator sees her. The view from the hut where Floria and her father live, showing the distant plain intersected by a winding river, does credit to the scenic department of the studio. So also do the settings of the palace of the gladiator and of the arena. These are elaborate. In the former flocks of pigeons hover about the terraces, so tame are they that stepping on them is with difficulty avoided. In the latter Nero is shown, surrounded by his favorites, watching the combat between Sergius, the husband of Floria, and a captive. The duel is waged with ferocity; the captive is wounded and the captor appeals to the emperor. It is thumbs down; the wounded man is put to death. Floria in her horror spurns the love of Sergius. Where she had admired the strength she now sees only the brute. The gladiator is unable to change her opinion. She flees to the abode of Paul the Apostle, at the time a preacher in Rome, although the chains that bind him to a Roman soldier indicate his restricted freedom. Paul consoles Floria; but when Sergius comes for her he tells the woman to go with her lord and master and all will be well.

There are strong situations. One of these is where Floria, just arrived at the palace of Sergius, is confronted by a young woman summoned by Sergius. "This maid shall be thy slave," says the gladiator. The daughter of the hills, filled with the love of freedom inherent in dwellers in a primitive, altitudinous country, reveals by her manner the utter impossibility of such a relation. She shrinks from the maid. Another scene that will stand out is where Nero, played by Mr. Nares, as the triumphant gladiator, standing beneath the emperor, asks the verdict. It is the vicious, leering face of a brute that looks down upon him. It portends the sign of death to follow. From a pictorial viewpoint there are many scenes that will charm. They are of the open country, in the beginning and in the conclusion of the story, of flocks of sheep and glassy surfaced pools; of Sergius and Floria, back from the city, strolling through fields of grain or tending the sheep or sitting in the glow of the firelight in their hut.

J. Searle Dawley produces the picture. He has done well. In three reels he has accomplished much. Aside from the fine acting of Miss Sawyer there is excellent support. Wellington A. Playter is the gladiator. He looks and is the part. Frank Van Buren's characterization of St. Paul is reverent, impressive; in his interview with Sergius he is the Christian militant, aggressive, commanding; when addressing the multitude he is once more the preacher, deliberate, placid.

"A GOOD LITTLE DEVIL" AT THE BELASCO.

Upon invitation of David Belasco and Daniel Frohman a large audience assembled at the Belasco Theater, in Forty-fourth Street, on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 16, to witness the projection of the Famous Players' five-part version of David Belasco's modern fairy play, "A Good Little Devil." The picture was shown under the immediate direction of S. L. Rothapfel, of the Regent Theater. The stage was decorated with flowers and fountains. The music, which has been specially arranged for the production by Joseph Carl Briel, was interpreted by Mrs. Nichols at the head of her orchestra of twenty-five women musicians, well known to theatergoers as the Boston Fadettes. The large gathering, among which were many prominent theatrical persons, warmly applauded the players on the screen, especially Mary Pickford, now a member of the Famous Players company. There was also a hearty greeting for David Belasco, who is shown at the opening of the play. It was an unusual occasion, and demonstrated what may be accomplished in the way of entertainment with good pictures, the right kind of music and artistic stage accessories.

BRABIN—MOSHER.

Charles J. Brabin, director for the Edison Company, and Miss Susette Mosher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Mosher, of 2930 Valentine Avenue, New York, were married Friday evening, December 14. The ceremony occurred at the Bedford Park Congregational Church, Bronx, New York, and was attended by the immediate relatives of the bride. Marc MacDermott was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Brabin will make their home at the Hotel Theresa, 125th Street and Seventh Avenue, New York, for the present.

JAPANESE GIRL IS NEW FILM STAR.

Thomas Ince, director for the New York Motion Picture Company, at Edendale, recently signed a contract with clever Miss Tsuru Aoki, whose work with the Majestic Company in the film "The Oath of Tsura San" has been meeting with such praise. Mr. Ince has five new film dramas in which he will feature Miss Aoki. She was contemplating a season in vaudeville when the pictures "got" her.

SOL LESSER OPENS NEW YORK OFFICE.

So far as is generally known, the first New York office of any out-of-town exchange has been opened in Room 614, Candler Building, 220 West 42nd Street, by Sol Lesser, owner of the Golgate Film Service. Here will be established, before Mr. Lesser's return to California, a competent buying, advertising, and managing force, whose business it will be to act for Mr. Lesser in the purchase of territorial rights on the best feature films made.

Sol Lesser.

This step will preclude the possibility of bad investment. Every feature purchased will be examined by the representing buyers whose report will govern Mr. Lesser's action. The establishment of this office will facilitate shipping of film, lithographs, etc., and will insure prompt deliveries. The saving in expensive and trouble making delays will be worth much.

Sol Lesser is one of the youngest men in the exchange business, and his fearlessness in tackling big things, and his success in carrying them to profit, does not belie the enthusiasm of youth, though suggesting the wisdom of older years. Beginning with a small exchange in California, he now controls exclusive booking rights on the major number of the big features in California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico and Colorado, with offices in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Butte, Denver, and Salt Lake City. His weekly film purchases average $5,000.

MILWAUKEE HAS CENSOR BOARD.

It Is Not Official and Works Without Pay—Will Censor Only Pictures Not Passed by National Board.

MILWAUKEE has joined the ranks of the cities that take a safe and sane view of the censorship of motion pictures and picture theaters. Several weeks ago, following a visit to that city of a woman agitator named Kate Davis, there sprung up an insistent demand for a censorship for motion pictures. One of the Milwaukee daily papers helped agitate the question and the result was the introduction of a stringent ordinance in the Common Council. Alarmed at the prospect, the picture theater men of Milwaukee got together and succeeded in holding up the ordinance until the work now being done by the National Board of Censorship in New York could be explained.

It happened that John Collier, who has been identified with the work of the National Board since its inception, was in the west at the time and consented to visit Milwaukee for the purpose of helping the exhibitors out of their difficulty. Mr. Collier appeared before the Milwaukee board of aldermen and when he had told them what the National Board of Censorship was doing and how they did it and in what way the city of Milwaukee could best assist in the work of keeping the pictures clean, his suggestions met with instant approval. The Milwaukee papers gave the plan editorial sanction and Mayor Bading was authorized to appoint a committee of seven citizens to constitute a censorship commission.

Acting under this plan, Mayor Bading has appointed the following named men as members of the commission: G. R. Radley, City Club; George E. Ballhorn, president of the Milwaukee Bar Association; Charles M. Phillips, Moving Picture Association; B. K. Fischer, Moving Picture Association; E. W. Barrows, Central Council of Social Agencies; Gustav M. Meyer, Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association; O. E. Thomas, former president of Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23.

This commission will organize at once and establish headquarters where all complaints against objectionable pictures can be filed. Thereupon the commissioners are to investigate the charges and report to the mayor, with recommendations. If such charges are sustained it is within the power of the mayor, under an existing ordinance, to revoke the license of the picture house for displaying films contrary to public ideas of morality, provided he deems the recommendations of the commission in such case sufficiently grounded.

It is the purpose of the commission to examine all pictures that have not been passed upon by the National Board. A plan for viewing all pictures not previously censored will be announced to Milwaukee exhibitors and any exhibitor who runs uncensored pictures without submitting them to the commission may have his license revoked. The commission will also examine general conditions regarding picture theaters.

That this plan will meet the demand for a local censorship of pictures to the satisfaction of all interested parties is fully believed and the ordinance establishing a compulsory censorship has been withdrawn.

IOWA LEAGUE HOLDS MEETING.

A meeting of the Iowa State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at Cedar Rapids, on Tuesday and Wednesday, December 2 and 3. More than 75 exhibitors were in attendance. The principal business transacted was the election of officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Claude E. Wierck, of Sioux City; vice-president, A. J. Diebold, Cedar Rapids; national vice-president, Thomas I. Brown, of Iowa City; secretary and treasurer, W. C. Eddy, of Marengo.

National Secretary George H. Wiley, of Kansas City, Mo., was in attendance and addressed the meeting at some length upon the evils of competition.

On the question of censorship of motion pictures, the members of the Iowa State Branch went on record as opposed to either state or local censorship. A resolution to that effect was adopted by a unanimous vote.

The next meeting of the Iowa exhibitors will be held at Des Moines, on the second Tuesday in May, 1914, at which time delegates to the National Convention, at Dayton, Ohio, will be elected.

While the convention was in session the exhibitors of Cedar Rapids took advantage of the enthusiasm to perfect the organization of a local for that city. It will be known as Cedar Rapids Local No. 1. A second local will be formed at Des Moines.

OHIO CENSORS REPORT.

From the first official report made by the Ohio Board of Censors, it is learned that the board has examined 8,000 reels of pictures. Of these, 62 have been banned in their entirety because of alleged immoralities or indiscretions; 800 were ordered modified and 50,000 feet have been ordered cut out of pictures which are otherwise proper to exhibit.

The censors have a permanent office above the Rose Theater, Fourth and Rich Streets, Columbus, Ohio.

NEW YORK STATE COMMITTEE MEETING.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of New York State was held at the Imperial Hotel, on Monday, December 15. Several upstate exhibitors were present, including Secretary Douque, of Utica, and Treasurer John C. Davis, of Saugerties. Matters pertaining to the welfare of the association were discussed, after which the party enjoyed an elaborate luncheon. President Sam Trigger presided. During the afternoon pictures of the members of the party were taken by a motion picture camera and shown at the New York Exhibitors' Ball in the evening. All the upstate men remained over for the ball Monday night and on Tuesday they were entertained by the New York members.

Tuesday night, Mr. Trigger, John F. Miller of Buffalo, William Douque of Utica, and H. W. Rosenthal of New York, left for Chicago, where a meeting of the executive committee of the International Association is to be held.

MARSHAL NEILAN RETURNS TO KALEM.

Marshal Neilan, who was formerly a member of the Kalem Santa Monica Company, has returned to the Kalem forces and is to leave for California at the head of his own company, shortly.

To exhibitors throughout the country who remember Mr. Neilan's work in comedy roles, this announcement will come as welcome news. There are few performers in motion pictures who have the ability to cram as much genuine comedy into their roles as this sterling performer. Pictures in which Mr. Neilan was featured invariably brought gratifying results to the theaters where they were shown.

A spacious studio is being erected near Santa Monica and will be ready for Mr. Neilan within a week or two. The new director has been given a free hand in the selection of his company and has gathered about him an exceptionally well-balanced aggregation of players. Miss Irene Boyle, one of the most popular Kalem stars, will be Mr. Neilan's leading lady.

NOTICE TO MICH. AND WIS. EXHIBITORS.

The Eclectic Film Company, of New York, is announcing the fact of having granted an exclusive agency to the Wolverine Feature Film Co., with head offices at Detroit and a branch office at Milwaukee. The Wolverine Company, henceforth, will handle all Eclectic features exclusively in the states named. Their contract with the Eclectic Co. enables them to seize forthwith any films of Eclectic brand that may be booked in that territory by outsiders. Exhibitors in Michigan and Wisconsin should therefore apply for service direct to the Wolverine Feature Film Co. It may be taken for granted that large numbers of exhibitors will hail with pleasure the news that, from now on, they can book a brand of film which, up to the present time, owing to peculiar conditions, they have been unable to obtain.

"Through the Clouds."

A Four-Part Apex Feature That Has Made Quite a Sensation In England.

THOUGH a subject dealing with the doings of the "underworld," there is considerable to interest and create suspense in the Apex feature entitled "Through the Clouds," a four part subject being offered to state right buyers by the Apex Film Company. The picture was produced by the B. & C. Company, of London, and has gained considerable vogue among picture theater patrons in England and upon the continent, and is now offered for the first time to American exhibitors.

The plot of the story is laid in London and has to do with the operations of a band of crafty and daring thieves of international reputation and their subsequent capture by a celebrated detective at great risk. In the search for sensational scenes the makers have introduced a balloon and an aeroplane, a bit of novelty when it comes to catching thieves. The use of these air craft comes about in this way: Hilliard, the detective, has tracked the thieves to their headquarters and is captured by them and bound hand and foot. He attempts to escape and is so nearly successful that the desperate criminals determine to make way with him for good and all.

Scene from "Through the Clouds" (Apex).

Ordinarily they would, under such circumstances, knock the detective on the head and conceal his remains, but this band is more spectacular; they propose to take him up in a balloon and drop him over somewhere out at sea. Clever idea; what? Tricing the detective up in proper style he is taken to the aviation grounds, where the band keeps its private balloon, hoisted aboard and sent aloft in company of one of their number.

The rescue—of course, there must be a rescue—is effected by the detective's daughter. The girl gets anxious because her daddy does not return home as quickly as he should and she starts out to find him. Getting into the thieves' house, she conceals herself in a box couch and hears the dastardly plot to drop her daddy into the sea from a balloon. Being a quick witted girl, she thinks of chasing the balloon in an aeroplane and an aviator, when he hears her story, agrees to take her up. Chase of balloon by aeroplane follows until the girl is shown to climb out of the plane and into the balloon where she releases her father and they come safely to ground later on. Returning to London, the capture of the thieves is a simple matter.

Interest is supposed to center in the chase of the balloon by the aeroplane and it is interesting to note the maker's explanation of how that part of the picture was made.

"Two balloons and an aeroplane were employed in this remarkable invasion of the skies. The two balloons were lashed together, one a trifle above the other. In the upper balloon the director and camera operator took their places, where they could command an unbroken view of the stage —in this instance the basket of the lower balloon. M. Verrier, the famous air-man, was engaged to guide the aeroplane that figures so conspicuously in the story. The Welsh Harp, Hendon, England, was selected as the scene of this sensational undertaking because of the desirability of the natural scenery, which exactly fits the atmosphere of the scenario. On a clear, bright day, when little air was stirring, the ascent was made with the hero tightly bound and gagged in the basket. Up and up soared the twined balloons until they were almost lost to view of the hundreds of newspaper and magazine representatives and thousands of curious spectators attracted by so unusual an event. An altitude of 8,000 feet was reached before the soaring crafts were overtaken by the rescuing aeroplane.

"Miss Marie Pickering, a beautiful girl of 18, who has won an enviable reputation in the moving picture world, was aboard the aeroplane in the role of the plucky daughter, Thelma. Upon reaching the balloon and shooting the villain keeping guard over the helpless detective, it was her perilous task to leap from the aeroplane to a rope dangling from the balloon. This done, she climbs her way, hand over hand, to the basket to complete the work of rescue."

You make take the maker's word for it or not, as you please; but you will find yourself watching the picture closely to discover how it was really done. Otherwise the acting and technique of the subject is as good as the average.

"The Stranglers of Paris."

Six-Part Subject of Tense Situations Adapted from a French Tale of the Underworld.

A FEW weeks ago the Moving Picture World had occasion to condemn, in unmeasured terms, a motion picture feature production entitled "The Stranglers of Paris," adapted from the stage version by David Belasco of the famous novel of the same title by Belot. The production was made at the instance of J. Parker Reid, better known for his "Garden of Allah" picture and, while the acting and photography of the picture were commended, the depiction of crime was altogether too realistic to be presented to the public. Whether the producer recognized this fatal defect himself, or whether the criticism of the Moving Picture World brought him to a realization of the fact that the subject in its original form was not suited for public exhibition, does not matter. The more important consideration is that he has very materially changed it from its original form, eliminating all of the more objectionable features and toning down others until he has now a feature production to which serious objection cannot be made. It must be said, also, that in making the necessary eliminations the strength of the picture has not been affected in the least degree, which proves that the depiction of crime is not necessary to make a picture strong or thrilling.

Scene from "The Stranglers of Paris" (Victory).

"The Stranglers of Paris" was directed by James Gordon, who also plays the leading role of Jagon, the Strangler. Not only is Mr. Gordon's work as director excellent, but his delineation of Jagon is most convincing. Jane Fernley, long a picture favorite, takes the part of his daughter. The other members of the cast provide excellent support throughout. The scenic effects are well chosen and form an interesting part of the picture, and the photographic quality is above the average. All the elements of good picture making are there.

However, the picture is made and, in comparison with others of the same type, it is as good if not better than the average. The producers deserve credit for having done their work well and their willingness to eliminate the more objectionable features indicates that they recognize a limit beyond which they may not go with propriety or profit.

"Fantomas III."

The Phantom Crook Does Terrible Deeds and Utterly Baffles the Police for Four More Reels by Gaumont.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

LET us record at the start that where pictures with a decided punch are wanted, where startling and terrible sensations presented with logic enough to make them connect up for the time in a seemingly organic whole are desired, this third installment of "Fantomas" will be welcome, will even stir enthusiasm. It is a picture of impenetrable mystery until the end. The opening situation it presents is tremendous and holds until it is cleared up.

Murder follows murder or terrible attempt at murder in it, each so unexpected and so inexplicable for the time that the spectator gets the full effect as though each was the big thrill. The stage craft of the picture is admirable. The producer has handled his material in such a way that each blow that it gives—the picture gives blows that can be felt almost with physical sense—comes home to the spectator like a thud. To crown it all, the acting is well nigh perfect. Those players whose duty it is to give the color of human life—the big, human-hearted duke; his charming sweetheart, the princess; the sister of the first victim and the young journalist, Fandor,—express, each in his own way, love, vigor and all that makes life good. On the other hand, those players whose duty it is to give the background of death—Fantomas, the police officials, etc.—wear cold masks, emotionless and terrible on human kind. Of course, what the picture is really interested in is the background of death, not life, and is, from its heart out, brutal. It was made in France, a country whose best critics have found in some of Shakespeare's dramas so much brutality that they have declared the English of Elizabeth's time barbarians.

Scene from "Fantomas III" (Gaumont).

Most picture fans have seen the two series of "Fantomas" that have preceded; but it is not necessary to have seen the others to get the story and meaning of these four reels. It is better to have seen the others for the sake of acquaintance with the characters; because the spectator will think he is missing something at first, it being the producer's aim to keep him wondering. The opening scene shows a young painter, Jack Dillon, alone in his study reading. The portieres tremble and in walks, unheard, the terrible man in black and now he has chloroformed his victim. At a sign, two others like him bring in a basket and open it. The scene is ended. Next morning the caretaker finds him there and what is more, the camera swings and we find another corpse seated in a chair. The man is revived and there is enough evidence to make the police arrest the artist. One is not given time to consider the weakness or strength of this; for as soon as the young man has given his finger print and is taken to his cell he is strangled and before his sister can get to the prison the cell is found empty and perhaps the victim has been taken out and resuscitated. The attention is kept in state of stunned wonder.

We are told that Fantomas is, by day, a journalist on a paper for which another young journalist, Fandor, is working. Fandor in deeply interested in the case and we watch Fantomas calmly observant of his efforts to unravel it. Soon we are shown the body of Jack again. It is down in the great sewers and Fantomas with a helper cuts its hand. Later, Juve, the detective, is introduced. He is playing idiot and is employed as a helper by Fantomas, who doesn't resognize his old arch enemy. Glimpses of underground rooms and sewer scenes, through which they go, are full of interest. Fandor, too, following a clew comes down to the sewer and has an adventure, but is saved from Fantomas, in a seemingly idiotic way, by Juve.

The story from this point on is complicated, but is kept clear enough. Fantomas has determined to get some famous gems owned by the Princess Danidoff, fiancee of the Duke of Florence and a dim and misty clue has been found by Jack's sister. Jack Dillon's finger print has been appearing in connection with crimes and has mystified the police. We see the crook, disguised as a banker at the ball of the duke and we see him chloroform the princess and get the pearls. She is revived and the only clue is a finger print on her neck—Jack's. The duke is now done to death and Jack's sister, trying to get the clue to Fandor, is nearly killed Fandor meets Juve and together they trap the crook and find that he is wearing the skin of Jack's hand as a glove. He still escapes; for there is to be one more picture.

NEW ENGLAND PICTURE PERSONALITIES.

The New England offices of Warner's Features, Incorporated, are now located at 207-209 Pleasant Street, Boston. The new offices, which are equipped with every convenience, include the executive offices, film, booking, and poster departments, over which presides Harry F. Campbell, one of the ablest and best liked film men in this territory.

Warner's Features have a separate Massachusetts corporation with Samuel Grant as president, and Mr. Campbell the treasurer and general manager. Besides directing the activities of Warner's Features, the firm of Grant & Campbell owns and operates the following moving picture houses: Princess, Marlboro; Olympia, Cambridge; Dreamland, Lynn; and the Plaza at Salem; all in Massachusetts. In a general way, Mr. Grant handles the theaters, while Mr. Campbell is the exchange man, although, each partner is easily able to take up the other's end of things. Mr. Campbell very modestly disclaims any particular responsibility for the fact that, although the regular Warner weekly program has been going but a short time, there are practically no cities or towns in all the New England States in which the program is not represented. A franchise has been sold to some photoplay house in almost any city one could name. To quote Harry, "The exhibitors realize that the public is insistently demanding the highest class of dramatic, western, and, above all, sensational features. This, the Warner program offers, and, in addition, the aid of an exceptionally fine grade of advertising helps of all kinds. Inasmuch as the demand was there, why should I claim any great credit for filling this call?" In closing, Mr. Campbell remarked, "Our exclusive idea is also one that meets with the undivided approval of exhibitors."

FIRST "AMERICAN" THREE REEL SUBJECT.

The first three reel subject put out by the American Film Mfg. Co. has been set for release Monday, January 12th, 1914. The title is "Destinies Fulfilled" and makes a very beautiful subject full of heart throbs and human interest. It involves three generations and is told in a charming manner, with great care and precision. Sydney Ayres plays the lead with Vivian Rich playing opposite, in the first two reels. In the last reel Harry Von Meter is the lover and Vivian Rich "doubles" as her own daughter. Excellent versatility is is displayed on the part of the entire cast. The usual "Flying A" quality and beautiful, natural settings predominate.

REGULAR VITAGRAPH COMEDY SPECIAL.

Beginning Tuesday, January 6th, the Vitagraph Company of America will release regularly every Tuesday a two-part, special feature comedy. This will take the place of the one reel regular release. This comedy multiple will be of the same type as "The Regiment of Two," "Jerry's Mother-in-Law," "Beauty Unadorned" and "Women on the Warpath."

BRITISH NOTES.

THE American Co. (London), Ltd., of Chicago, proprietors of "Flying A" productions, have removed to larger premises. Their address will now be 193 Wardour St., London, W.

Next year's International Kinematograph exhibition, to be held at Olympia, promises to outdistance all previous exhibitions in this country. In addition to a huge galaxy of interesting novelties, the pianist contest will be judged by no less an expert than Mark Hambourg.

A statement issued to local magistrates from the British Home Office points out that moving picture theaters, in which inflammable materials have been used for purposes of decoration, should not be granted licenses until they have been fireproofed.

Some animated discussion has been precipitated in London's film center apropos the statement by a leading newspaper that Kinoplastikon—Mr. Charles Urban's invention—will, before long, supersede ordinary moving pictures. Lest, however, there be any misapprehension the statement had better be taken, as the ancients would say, "cum grano salis," for it must be borne in mind that Kinoplastikon requires a well set stage, an adjunct for which 75 per cent. of moving picture theaters the world over are not equipped. However, for exhibitors on the lookout for something novel and if circumstances permit, I would advise them to see the Kinoplastikon rendering of "The Corsican Brothers." It is being very highly spoken of by eminent novelists and journalists who have seen the pictured drama at the Scala Theater in London.

An anti-moving picture bugbear, of whom, by the way, nobody appears to take any notice, is again blowing his horn in a London newspaper with a new objection to American made films. Here is the utterance: "Films dealing with the humorous situations brought about by the easy facilities for divorce in a certain American state are ridiculous to us and unreal in the extreme. No English people would behave in this way. A large proportion of the films exhibited introduce the spectator to scenes which imply quite un-English conceptions of behavior, government, law, and order. A code of divorce is presented which is quite foreign to us and the police are seen behaving in ways that would not be tolerated for a moment by the police in this country."

A committee of distinguished musical critics were present the other day at a private matinee in London of "Wagner's Parsifal" film and spoke in eulogistic terms of its beauty. Another wonderful film shown privately was the story of "Judith and Holofernes" from the Apocrypha.

Among the many Kinematograph firms that have tried to secure pictures of the Pope, many stories are told of the Holy Father's disinclination to pose before the camera. In fact, his immovable refusals to appear before the camera at all have been many. I hear, however, that an enterprising company has secured a length of film depicting the private life of the Pontiff, yet, how they have done this, no one seems to know.

A film renter in a modest way of business in a northern city has opened a new and profitable sideline. He runs the following advertisement in a local newspaper: "To those about to be married. Do you wish to preserve a faithful, animated recollection of the happiest day of your life? You do! Then have a moving picture film made of your wedding to show to your grandchildren in future years. It only costs five guineas. Send a postcard for particulars to ———." The line seems profitable enough, $25 for a few feet of film with a possibility of selling duplicate copies to the relatives or wedding guests. The introducer of this idea tells me that he sent his operator to film four weddings one Saturday afternoon and he did all the negative work upon 200 feet of stock.

D. W. Player, of Foulkestone, has conceived the idea of securing colors to moving picture films by taking two exposures through the same lens through the agency of reflecting mirrors. The correct reproduction of colored objects upon the emulsion is obtained by three color filters through which the light passes before reaching the film. An application for a patent has been accepted.

Augustus Carney (Alkali Ike), is spending a short holiday in his native country—Ireland. He did the rounds of London last week and looks unusually fit. He proposes to return to America early in the new year.

At Bow Street Police Court (London), last week, Mr. Baldoli, a film dealer, was charged with infringing the copyright act by importing into this country a copy of the Cines film "Antony & Cleopatra." Marquis Serra had already acquired the sole English rights of the film and for the offense Baldoli was fined £20 and £5-5-0 costs.

KLEINE BUILDS STUDIO IN ITALY.

Cable advices from George Kleine tell of the building of a magnificent and costly studio in Italy which will be used to produce big Kleine attractions in connection with the steady hunt through Europe for bigger productions of other manufacturers. This is the result of the formation of the Photo Drama Production Company of Italy by himself and two associates. Mr. Kleine cables to the home office: "You are now at liberty to announce formation of Photo Drama Production Company of Italy by myself and two associates. Have bought beautiful estate permitting staging of 50 scenes simultaneously in natural and artifical settings. Policy is to combine artistic perfection of Italian with virility of American methods, taking the best out of both schools. Big features only. Have engaged well known American artists not previously in pictures."

MUTUAL SENDS NEW COMPANY TO COAST.

Westward Ho! is still the cry of the film men. Another company of Mutual players will help swell the ranks of the large Los Angeles motion picture colony within a few days. General Director D. W. Griffith selected the actors with special care having in view the style of dramas in which they are to appear. Many of the stories have already been arranged in final form for picture production, among them being the popular three act play "A Man and His Mate," by George Durant. Several interior scenes for this drama, which will be presented in three parts, are being made in a Pullman coach while the company is en route to the coast.

The former Kinemacolor studio on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, Los Angeles, is being remodeled to receive the Mutual players and a new factory is being completed on the grounds for the handling of the film. Joseph Altschulter, formerly of the Biograph, will be the expert in charge of the factory while Samuel Landers, also of Biograph fame, will head the list of camera men, Christy Cabanne has been chosen by Mr. Griffith as head director and his acting company includes Miriam Cooper, formerly with Kalem; Raoul Walsh, of the Biograph; Frank Bennett, of the Vitagraph; Fred and Robert Burns, of Biograph fame; Eagle Eye, the expert Indian horseman, and Dark Cloud, who is rated by Mr. Griffith as the foremost Indian actor in the world.

According to Director Cabanne, heart interest for the trip is being furnished by Samuel Landers and his bride who are honeymooners, only a few days removed from the License Bureau. The company left New York at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, December 13.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

WITH the year 1913 rapidly drawing to a close we find the chief topic of speculation and discussion, among those interested in the various branches of the motion picture business, hinges upon the prospects for the new year that will open within a few days. While the views expressed upon the subject vary in accordance with the individual sources of information there is a unanimous concurrence in the opinion, so frequently expressed in these columns, to the effect that the photoplays are steadily progressing from an artistic standpoint and with the same amount of energy and judgment expended upon them by the producers during the coming year the results will be far more remunerative to producers, renters and exhibitors than at any other period in the history of the business. At no other time have those who devoted years of labor to elevate the silent play to the standard to which they believed the productions belonged had occasion to be more enthusiastic over their accomplishments and the outlook than at the present time, and in the exchange of the season's greetings with one another.

This spirit is strongly shown in the holiday reflections of the dramatic publications conducting motion picture departments. Unfortunately the formulation of the views presented has apparently been left in the hands of people whose knowledge of the business is in an infantile stage. This oversight has occasioned no little comment, in that much of the credit due for the prosperous condition of the business is accorded to a few new-comers to the field and the achievements of the pioneers have been masked. This is so pronounced in at least one article as to force the conclusion that the opinions expressed are biased in favor of certain theatrical interests that became interested in the photoplay work only within the last year or two. In other words, the writer of the article seems to have been disposed to frame it more in an advertising strain than as a broad, unvarnished résumé of conditions attending the past and present.

The large theatrical interests now engaged in the production of high class photoplays cannot be accorded too much credit for what they have accomplished in the brief period of their operations, but it is certainly unfair to even intimate that what they have done elevated photoplays to their present plane. An impartial review of the records shows that the work started in that direction by others actually forced the latter day factors into the field. The files of the Moving Picture World will show the periods when the theatrical interests to which the credit is given made known their intentions to go into the photoplay business because of the hold the plays had secured upon the amusement public. Motion picture progress was steadily claiming the attention of the higher class of people who had for so long a time looked upon the pictures as cheap productions for cheap theaters patronized by the poor class of people. This sentiment was one of the greatest obstacles in the path of the pioneer producers. It was the greatest obstacle. The patronage of the more wealthy class of people was absolutely essential to the advancement of the artistic branch of the business. When the ground was broken and that patronage became noticeable the pioneers increased their producing expenses and the exhibitors commenced to elaborate in the construction of their houses to attract and hold that patronage, and derive revenues to enable them to meet the increased rental charges necessitated by the increased cost of productions.

The contention made by writers that art should be considered before commercialism should receive universal support. It is a pity it cannot be made a duty on the part of some producers. In such event many of them would be forced out of business to the relief of the patrons of the photoplays. But the contention does not hold good when it is intended to infer that art has only been considered within the last year or two, because either the producers were not equal to the task, or were controlled by a spirit of commercialism.

There are not a half dozen men in the theatrical ranks who now claim foremost recognition, or are credited with what has been accomplished, in the photoplay field, who know anything about the early history of the business, other than what they may have read or heard. They paid no attention to motion pictures. In fact, they ignored and ridiculed them and would have felt offended three years ago if told that their houses would have been used for motion picture exhibitions and that their high salaried and renowned companies would be transplanted from the stage to the picture studio. It is just about three years ago that a director for a moving picture company narrowly escaped assault for advising an actor-friend he met on Broadway to "get into the picture game."

To properly ascertain to whom credit is actually due for the present status of the photoplays one must go back to what may be called the stone age of the business, and the energy, patience, enterprise and courage on the part of the pioneers who are still in the ranks must be considered. Space will not permit a proper review here, but to counteract some false impressions that may have been conveyed by recent writers, a few references should be made. About twelve years ago the American market was supplied almost exclusively by foreign manufacturers, and the home trade was obliged to be content with some awful stuff. The American companies, of which there were—well, less than half a dozen, were devoting their time to topical subjects, such as conflagrations, parades, etc. Occasionally short comedy subjects were produced. That was the time when one reel of pictures was used to close the vaudeville shows and they were so much ridiculed by the management and the performers that gradually the audiences became infected with the spirit of contempt and it was a common sight to see half or more of an auditorium emptied as soon as the motion picture announcement was flashed upon the screen. That was the time when only the pioneers saw the real possibilities of the moving pictures. The vaudeville manager simply tolerated them as cheaper than an act to close the bill. The vaudeville performers opposed the pictures because they displaced acts. It was a trying time for the pioneers and many times they were so discouraged that abandonment of the business was considered. If this had taken place none of the prominent theatrical people would be in the photoplay business today. It is the unanimous opinion of the veteran producers that the great turning point in moving picture history was the advent of the story picture. It hit the key note in the field of the masses. Those whose education had been neglected, those who were devoid of the sense of hearing, working people who had no time or opportunity for reading found a goal of pleasure and interest that was never supplied until the story picture flashed upon the screen. The nearest approach to their gratification had been the now forgotten panorama. The casts employed by the manufacturers of the films at that time consisted of factory and office staffs. Occasionally amateur stage people were induced to take part. Professional people were not to be had for sometime after, for two reasons: First, professional pride on the part of the actors. Second, hesitancy on the part of the producers to go to the expense of hiring professional talent (if it could be had), on account of the small returns received for pictures at that time. Nickelodeons were only just opening then. The idea of charging ten cents admission was preposterous. Productions were few and far apart at that time, too. There was no changing of programs every day, or even twice a week. One set of films ran a whole week. Then came one of the most important factors in the growth of the business. The demand of the public. Changes of programs became necessary and to make them the manufacturers increased their investments and gradually multiplied the productions. Then producers became as numerous as claim-stakers in new territory, with the result that that important factor in the growth of the business—the public—made a demand for better and more artistic plays. Many mushroom makers fell by the wayside, but the veterans met the demand and are shoulder to shoulder with the others that have since undertaken to promote the welfare of the photoplay.

All due credit to the veterans and a Merry Christmas to all who have been and are still striving to keep art above commercialism; and it is hoped that the new year will be so prosperous for them that when it comes to a close the commercial vultures who undermine public confidence will be driven from the photoplay field.

CLINTON, IOWA, TO GET NEW HOUSE.

The Lyons Investment Company, of Clinton, Ia., is to build in Sixth Street, that city, a moving picture house to be constructed of steel, brick and cement. The dimensions of the structure will be 40 by 110 feet, with a seating capacity of 500. Henry Luhr, son of Otto Luhr, one of the directors of the company, will be installed as manager.

Moving Picture Educator

"THE SNAIL-EATERS" (Eclair).

GREAT patience must have characterized the taking of this film which will amply repay every effort in the results accruing to its study in the classroom where again it will be found that a most obscure subject has been brought to the front in such a simplified form that pleasure is found in looking at a subject in natural history which is so intensely interesting that the idea of learning a lesson is lost in the pleasure of the picture.

The Glandina.

The first snail-eater shown is the Glandina, which, indeed, is not much unlike the snail itself except that it seems of larger proportions. The three-fold characteristics of the Glandina are its long tentacles, its spindle shaped shell, which, snail-like, it carries on its back; and its extreme voracity. Having taken possession of its victim by the aid of its long feelers, the Glandina forces itself into the shell of the snail and by means of the suckers with which its mouth is provided slowly absorbs its prey. At the conclusion of the feast the Glandina, exuding itself from the home from which it has devoured the occupant, is seen to be vigorously wiping its feelers and starts off to search another victim.

The Ophisaurus.

This second snail-eater is a lizard shaped reptile. It also proves itself an epicure as regards snails. Its gluttony leads it to seek the largest and plumpest morsels, which, however, it must often forsake for a smaller feast, more in proportion to its capabilities. Contrary to the Glandina, which enters the shell to secure its meal, the Ophisaurus must break in from the outside, which it proceeds to do; taking the shell in its mouth and succeeds in breaking it open, when to devour the savory contents is easy. Its habit now is a bath in the water, a roll on the ground, then a rest to prepare it for another attack.

"CADIS WORMS."

This is another film showing extraordinary detail in research into the hitherto unknown habits of these denizens of the water, where in great secret they have been able to continue unobserved that metamorphosis which it has long been the desire of the naturalist to know. Micro-Cinematography has certainly been a great aid to natural history, greater perhaps than to any other educational branch. For increased interest, and pleasure giving study, the habits of this subject have been classified.

How They Are Clothed.

The larvae live in cylindrical tubes or cases of silk, covered externally with pieces of shell, fine gravel, tiny pieces of weed, straw, etc., their appearance is certainly unique as they are seen carrying about with them what seems an unwieldy tube, which, while protecting them, is extremely cumbersome.

How They Feed.

Cadis worms feed on vegetable substance, although they do not occasionally object to a carnivorous feast, as the film shows.

How They Defend Themselves.

They possess an armored sheath which protects them from voracious marauders that frequent stagnant pools, although it is a case of bad luck to one which leaves its case and comes in conflict with the larvae of the dragon fly, but, for isolation and protection, these astute neuroptera hide behind a net.

Transformation.

When the larva is ready for the change it emerges from the water, climbs a blade of strong grass to which it clings, and, after a series of convulsions, sheds its envelope and becomes the full grown winged insect. The classified habits and changes in this film give greater interest and added simplicity to the subject which, like all of its predecessors, increases the value of the well known Eclair natural-history films.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Christmas for greetings. The New Year for wishes. The Christmas greetings convey joyful anticipations and the fullness of a year's good, bursting forth with thankfulness. The new year is happiness in prospective through prosperity—A Happy and Prosperous New Year—being the sentiment in the universal exchange of wishes.

It, therefore, has a commercial ring, business results are measured off annually, the year is of varied experiences; "thirtyfold, sixtyfold, a hundredfold," in the several proportions of diverse possibilities.

Wishes are never retrospective, they are the forerunners of everything, outspeeding and outdistancing every project. Wishes are alluring, of no "will-o-the-wisp" character, but under the beacon light of hope, they can assume definite form and may be followed with a definite aim to a definite result. Wishes inspire with courage, they nerve the arm, vitalize the mind, energize all physical forces, and add strength to make real the unseen. Wishes are empowering, like good friends behind us, hoping, encouraging, helping and applauding when success has crowned with realization the former anticipations. On this basis may the moving picture in the world have a happy and prosperous new year.

May its light penetrate every darkness, not excepting ignorance, superstition and vice. Educating, enlightening, purifying, may its powers during the next year at least equal those of the years since its inception. It can no longer travel by halting stages, but—with the power that gave it birth—may it electrify the world.

Education, art, science, commerce, government, law and pleasure, are each eagerly anticipating the highest and best possible results and combining in one great wish, that these results shall be rapidly and speedily accomplished so that with each accomplishment newer and vaster futures may expand before them with each succeeding year. Wishes are realized only when the conditions working in the fulfillment are in harmony with those that originally prompted them.

The Moving Picture Educator wishes that the coming year may see the accomplishment of many of these great purposes which have inspired helpful suggestions during the years past. Educational Kinematography is growing in all parts of the moving picture world; nothing has preceded it in equal value; it would seem as though nothing could follow it of like importance. The great art of helping humanity in the onward and upward march of progress cannot under any conditions be made more effective than by wishing for the moving picture in general, and the moving picture educational powers in particular, a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

KINEMACOLOR AS KRIS KRINGLE.

Kinemacolor is going to celebrate Christmas with several special holiday releases, including the great four-reel picture pantomine of "Santa Claus," or "Elsa's Dream," as it is known in London, where it is the annual attraction at Charles Urban's Scala Theater and draws delighted throngs of the most fashionable children of the English metropolis. Small wonder, for it is one of the most remarkable spectacles ever filmed, illustrating not only the celebrated poem, "The Visit of St. Nicholas," but also one of the most charming "Ting-a-ling" tales of Frank R. Stockton. By clever trick photography with automatons, for which the English Kinemacolor operators are noted, Santa Claus is seen tobogganing down the Milky Way to the Earth—floating in space as illustrated in the physical geographies—and arriving on this terrestrial planet; his reindeer are the real thing. Santa Claus decends the chimney into the bedroom of Elsa, who is watching for him; and at her request she is transformed into the sprite, Ting-a-Ling, and accompanies Santa on his rounds. The sights she sees in tenements, hospitals and in Santa Claus' toy shop, are calculated to make her—and all others who see this film—kinder and happier in their appreciation of the true holiday spirit.

Another beautiful picture is entitled "The Christmas Spirit,"

Second Class.

BERTRAM I. WILLIAMS takes mild exception to our statement that his Photoplay Forum is a house organ for the Haynic Theater, Fairmount, Minn., to which we ask if not, why not. He says:

> The Fairmont Fotoplay Forum is NOT a Haynic house organ. It is simply a little weekly magazine that is being issued on the Photoplay. Since starting, we have issued about five thousand copies weekly, and so far I have received 836 paid subscriptions at 25c per copy. In order to overcome the postal regulations regarding second-class matter, it is necessary for this publication to be absolutely independent of any theater. That is one reason why comment on the house programs would be "Mucha Mala." The Haynic Theater's books show a weekly remittance to the Forum Publishing Company, which, by the way, is owned exclusively by yours truly. All advertising matter with the exception of cigarette and whiskey ads are eligible in the columns. We have been taking good care that all matters noted in the columns are noted in a very general way, and it will continue to be that way. When you consider that 5,000 at 1c a copy makes $50.00 weekly, you can easily see why second-class rates at 1c a pound make a paying proposition. And in this, I believe that I have opened up a new field for the men who are issuing weekly programs in the larger cities, for instance, take Brand's Motion Picture Weekly in Springfield, Ohio. Worked in the right way, that publication is easily eligible under the postal laws. After reading this and looking up No. 2, you will, I think, realize that I am working it the best way, because by putting the Forum through the post office, I am reaching people that cannot be reached through any other method of distribution. You will also notice, in a general way, that all players spoken of are licensed players. The Haynic runs licensed programs, and the opposition Mutual. I have always found that indirect advertising is just as good as direct advertising, and if the people who read the weekly read these articles the time is coming when they will realize that there is nothing shown in Fairmont, but licensed programs. Therefore, I consider those little notes just as good as calling their direct attention.

Again, Why?

We have found Mr. Williams an adroit advertiser, but in this case we think that his desire to mail by the pound instead of by the piece is a rather short-sighted policy since he holds back the direct advertising the house might receive.

We presume that he seeks second-class entry on the proposition that this is a publication dealing with the trade in general and not with the Haynic in particular, though it carries several pages of advertising for the Haynic for which checks are passed. On the basis of five copies to the pound the house saves the difference between $50 and $10, but we do not regard it as a saving since the second-class entry is not easy to obtain and not altogether easy to hold and it must show at all times that the publication is not circulated in the interests of any one house, therefore the house notices are kept out and the bare program is shown. The program is, of course, the principal thing, but if we had a house and could afford it, we would like to put that extra $40 into reading notices and make the paper talk for us all the way through.

The Motion Picture Weekly, referred to, is a sixteen-page sheet giving two pages to each of four theaters and the rest to general reading. We do not believe that either this or the Forum is sufficiently general in its nature to get the second-class rate and we do not think it advisable in either case. The program alone is not sufficient. Talk of the house, of its advantages and its attractiveness. Make people want to go for other reasons than the fact that a certain film is to be shown on a certain night. Work to convey the impression that if you lack the habit of visiting the house each night you are missing something, and you will find it more profitable than worrying about second-class entry.

Personally we would rather have one of those "door-knob specials" than the best little second-class house organ that could be run.

Another Dodge.

Julian M. Solomon, of Philadelphia, offers another dodge in the shape of a four-page "weekly," The Susquehanna News. This is palpably a house organ, but a local enactment forbids the distribution of circular matter and the News merely follows the lead of some of the grocery store "newspapers." It is merely a technical newspaper, a four-page issue that advertises merely the features and does not even give the program. There is a half-page chat on the first page, the rest of the space going to the head. The other three pages are devoted to house and outside advertising, the latter getting a shade the best of it. There is no reading matter other than the first page house argument. We cannot see how this will class as a newspaper unless an effort is made to give some general matter and any competing house can enter complaint and possibly get this theater into trouble. When we lived in Philadelphia we spent half the time kicking advertising matter off the front steps, and if the effect of the ordinance has merely been to increase these nuisances into newspapers, we think we would be tempted to object.

Mr. Solomon says that the paper pays for itself and the advertising solicitor, and he certainly makes a good showing, but an eight-page paper with enough good reading to assure a welcome for the publication would probably bring sufficient additional advertising and at the same time get out of the nuisance class. It might be possible to arrange for a series of these publications, using the same type for all and changing only the house announcements for the various sections.

The publication that rises above the mere program should offer some good material either devoted to the films or to local happenings of general interest in the section. The mere program with the advertisements of tradespeople will not do. There must be something to repay the reader for looking over the sheet. This will cost more money and perhaps represent a loss for a time, but will pay better in the long run and do both the house and the outside advertiser infinitely more good.

Just in passing it might be well to tell where the house is located. In the four issues already published, there is not a single line to tell where the house is, the hours of performance, the prices or whether or not matinees are given. This is inexcusable.

"All To the Mustard."

This lusty little chap doesn't look much like an advertising for exhibitors contribution, but he is. He is Jack Warren Kerrigan Mustard, the two-year-old son of William A. Mustard, of the Blue Mouse Theater, St. Paul. Mr. Mustard is a great admirer of Mr. Kerrigan and the advent of a small son enabled him to prove his loyalty by naming him after the player. We presume that to be up to date Mr. Mustard changed from Mutual to Universal when Mr. Kerrigan went from American to Victor, which opens interesting possibilities of film selling. If the General Film should want to get into the Blue Mouse it need only hire Kerrigan and the house will automatically transfer in order not to lose the advertising. Mr. Mustard is an advertiser all the way through and more consistent than the average exhibitor. Mr. Kerrigan may well be proud of his small namesake. Of course, our own small son is larger, prettier and healthier than this youngster and he's only a year and a half old, but our own being hors concours, this young man is all to the mustard, in a double sense—and bo stuff.

Educationals Pay.

Every little while we get a letter from some exhibitor who complains of the number of Educationals, but we believe that the educational subject will pay in any house if handled properly. Do not treat the educational subject as something to be despised, something that merely serves to fill in the half-reel comedy or a make weight. Use the Educational intelligently. Its use as a filler to gain the full thousand feet where a subject falls short of that length and yet is too long to carry another split subject has caused it to be looked upon as the sand in the sugar or the water in the milk. This is wholly a wrong idea. Do not look on it as so many feet of film, but study it from the point of view of your audiences. If your audiences do not appreciate the educational release, educate them—and yourself—to a better state of mind. It is one of the most wonderful things of this business that the whole world can be brought to one's very door. Hammer on that fact. Brag about your educationals, have special educational days. You may make your immediate money with "She wanted to be wicked—and she was" in five sections, but you'll make a more lasting success if you make your appeal to the cleaner side of the pictures and show their good points instead of their bad.

One correspondent—merely an audience person—went to a Philadelphia theater not long ago where a comedy had been advertised. After the show had been run through he sought the manager with a demand for the play he wanted. "I sent it back," was the surprising rejoinder. "It had one of those blank dashed educationals on the end of it and I didn't want it. I want pictures."

Some of these days he'll be telling that pictures do not pay, but about that time managers like Mrs. Lewis will have well-established houses, not solely because they use educationals, but because the same intelligence that leads them to perceive the value of the scenic and travel subjects enables them to make the best use of the other merits of the film and keeps them from sensationalism and filth.

Mrs. Lewis writes that she is not a real manager yet, but she is a great deal more of a real manager than some of the men who run their houses on blood and thunder sensation and turn to the poorer grade of imported stuff because the regular releases are "too tame."

Not Too Loud.

Those of you who can remember back to the time when the so-called "Keith vaudeville" was the most profitable form of amusement enterprise in the country, can directly trace the downfall of that amusement line to sensation. The introduction of bare-legged dancers and that sort of thing drove from the houses the people whose support assures success and houses where the dollar seats used to sell first now fill their balconies with the overflow from the galleries.

It is the same way with everything. There is bound to come a time when sensation cannot exceed itself and then there is nothing to offer the sensation seekers whose demand is always for more. Accustom a man to an always good program and he is content. Appeal to the jaded with sensation and they are not content with what they had last week. They want something more sensational this week and the next and the next, until it is either a case of disappoint them with the same or take a chance with police interference.

Program Stuff.

Here is a good argument for the neighborhood theater for your own program if your house is in that class. It is taken from the Olympian Theater News, Seattle:

> The neighborhood theater is as great a convenience as other community enterprises. In these days of strenuous endeavor it is absolutely necessary to have diversions from the cares of business and the household. To dress up and make the trip down town and back in crowded cars is not a pleasant task, but to step over to the neighborhood playhouse after the evening's work is done is no trouble. Truly, the neighborhood theater is a blessing.

A London Scheme.

Davison's Film Sales Agency, London, recently worked a novel stunt in advertising the B. & C. "The Master Crook." Two autos were sent out with thousands of uninflated toy balloons and at the stops the occupants of the cars inflated these and turned them loose. They were not filled with gas and were merely huge rubber balls almost, but not quite as light as air, and the efforts of the crowd to obtain one of the souvenirs were amusing in the extreme. The balloons could not be readily grasped and the slightest touch sent them bounding into the air again to be carried along by the breeze. The balloons were not unlike the rubber soap bubbles to be had over here, with the advertisement printed in white and a couple of dozen of them will keep a crowd busy and stop traffic for an hour. It was an advertising inspiration.

Another Calgary Program.

Meyer Cohen, publicity manager of the Allen and Rex Theaters, Calgary, Canada, sends in programs of the two houses. The Rex program has been commented on before, but the Allen is new to us. Mr. Cohen says:

> The issue will remain sixteen pages, done on 70-pound book, and we will never carry more than four pages of advertising, exclusive of the back cover.

Seventy-pound paper is pretty scrumptious—also expensive. We think that a forty-pound paper would be plenty good enough, but the heavy weight suggests an elegance that is in keeping with the text and the films advertised. The cover carries a cut of the house, made from the architect's drawing, and the first inside cover starts a running comment on the coming attractions that is carried over to the fourteenth and fifteenth pages, a chatty discussion of the subjects that is even more valuable than the special write-ups of the features.

A half-page of hints announces a willingness to arrange reservations in advance for theater parties and calls attention to the fact that the ladies' rest room is open to shoppers, whether they visit the performance or not. Some few will impose on this courtesy, but the general result will be distinctly profitable.

The publication is ready Wednesday, starting with the bill for the following Monday and twelve consecutive issues carry the promise of a set of portraits of the players, as set forth in the Rex program, the programs being presented at the office and returned to the owner, presumably after they have been checked in some fashion.

Both programs show that the management wants to keep in close touch with the individual patron through its programs and other matters, building its popularity on this firm foundation.

Mr. Cohen asks for a criticism, but we see little to criticize, unless it be the suggestion that a cut intended for a cheaper paper does not show up as well on this coated stock. From newspaper up the cut should be suited to the particular stock to be used. These cuts blotch up and do not harmonize with the rest of the sheet.

A Bit Overdone.

Eller Metzger, of the Casino, Des Moines, sends an advertisement and wants to know what we think of it. We think he overdid the cuts a bit. He runs eleven cuts of the players and rather skimps the type display in consequence. By all means use cuts and a sufficient number of cuts to attract and hold attention, but do not run cuts almost to the exclusion of the type. A cut at each corner would have been plenty, but with an area of 65 square inches of space, the type covers but little more than 15 inches, or about one-fourth. The display is small and cramped where the use of cuts top and bottom only with the type running across the center of the advertisement; the two programs listed could have been given ample display in about half the space taken by the advertisement. The cuts are merely those of the players on the licensed side and have no particular bearing on the programs advertised. "Alkali Ike's Auto," for instance, is merely titled in a twelve-point line, though to have told what a funny release this was, one of the really star comedies of the films, would have brought more new faces to the house than a picture of a player not in any of the advertised releases. When you pay for space get the most you can for your money, don't waste it advertising the favorites more or less to the exclusion of your house.

Get the Best of It.

The cut shows the top of the amusement page of the Reading News, and is interesting as showing the proportioning of the space, the photoplay theaters having much the best of it. Leave it to Ben Zerr to rouse things in the town he is in. The general interest of the public is gradually forcing the papers to give recognition to the photoplay as one of the features of the amusement situation. Have you done anything to help along in your town?

Getting Enough.

V. B. Johnson, of Warner's Features, ventures the opinion that the star order for heralds went to the Starland Theater, St. Paul, which ordered 20,000 heralds of the "Helen Gardner, Daughter of Pan," which is booked there for only two days.

Even for a town the size of St. Paul (beg pardon, CITY) a run of twenty thousand heralds is going some, but the price goes up to twenty-five cents for adults and a ten piece orchestra goes in. That's the way to work the big stuff. The exhibitor who cannot think more than ten cents is being left out of it these days.

Wants to Exchange.

This from Frank H. Hull, the Central Point (Oregon), Opera House:

> We are getting more good from your "Advertising" section than we are able to tell you and would like you to insert a request for advertising ideas from brother exhibitors for which we will make returns.
> The "Contagious Disease" in the last issue is a good one and expect to use it soon.

If you have something good send it along.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Mrs. Brandon Wants—

MRS. BRANDON, of the Eclair Company, wants Canadian subjects. Many correspondents have asked where these could be sold. Here is the first opening. Please remember that she desires to hear only from experienced writers.

> I have a crying need for two and three reel Canadian Northwest stories. We are prepared to pay as much as $100 per script for material which has the "guts," and which is absolutely original with the writer. I will thank you to mention this in your helpful column.

The Inquest Club.

An unusually spirited meeting of the Inquest Club was held December eighth, following the witnessing of the pictures at the Savoy Theater. In the discussion of "The Master of the Garden" it was pointed out that an allegory should be written only by those competent to handle the situation, this two-reeler making the theological error of leaving the Master in the garden instead of living up to the simile and having him follow the wandering sheep. Kalem's "The Strike," which was apparently written to take advantage of an actual strike situation, brought out the warning that struggles between capital and labor should be carefully handled to avoid giving offense to either side, since the screen should not be controversial and the technical handling of this script was used to show how this could be done. Several members suggested improvements, but in each case it was shown that these improvements would have reacted against the story instead of contributing added strength. A Biograph did not offer much for discussion, but Edison's "The Manicure Girl" brought out a lively debate. It was the consensus of opinion that a comedy of this sort, while it did not gain the roars of laughter that greeted the slapstick comedy, was better appreciated by most persons and longer remembered. Homer Croy, who contributes humorous articles to the leading publications, was called upon to render an expert opinion and decided in favor of the well-told story that pleased rather than the purely visual comedy of the slapstick.

The next meeting will be held December 22. Any person interested in writing photoplays is at liberty to join by the simple process of coming to the Savoy Theater, 112 West 34th Street, on that evening and joining the others in the lobby about half-past nine. A slide is thrown on the screen just before the last reel the club is to witness, giving ample warning. It might be added that the Savoy is now a full first run house.

If You Live in Los Angeles.

If you live in Los Angeles, you have the chance to sit in with two highly successful writers in a circle of the Inquest Club, provided that you can show that you have written at least one produced photoplay. This rule seems to be necessary since everyone in Los Angeles writes plays, from the barber to the banker. If you can qualify address the Secretary, Inquest Club, P. O. Box 513, Los Angeles.

If You Live in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia is shy an Inquest Circle, in spite of the fact that the town is the home of the Lubin Company. Now a writer wants to form a circle. A stamped and self-addressed envelope will give you the information.

At the Ed-Au Club.

The Ed-Au Club held its second regular session in the room at Keene's Chop House, generally used as the Morgue of the Inquest Club, on Saturday evening, December sixth, President Phil Lang presiding.

It was the first meeting of general interest and a profitable one to the handful of members present. Pop Hoadley made the most important contribution of the evening. One of the authors stated that when he got a good idea he set it aside in the hope of some day making a spoken drama of it and Mr. Hoadley charged down on him with the remark that no man who did not put all his heart, his soul and his brain in whatever he undertook could possibly find success and that no writer who gave to photoplay only his second best could possibly hope to win. In half a dozen sentences he gave the secret of the failure of so many whose attempts grow half-hearted with the first discouragement.

George Sargent, of the Eclair Company, started an interesting discussion on the placing of the relative importance of the characters at any given moment, contending that in a scene he had produced that afternoon he was in doubt as to which of two characters should have been made the most important in part of one scene. One man had been wrongfully accused of a murder and another, the actual culprit, had been brought into the room for a third degree. The question raised was whether the central figure of the moment was the innocent man, the guilty one, or the detective who was watching the result of his experiment. It was the general opinion that the real culprit had the stage at the moment, but the editors agreed that not infrequently the author gave undue prominence to the wrong character, and it was argued that greater care should be exercised in apportioning the interest—that the central figure of the moment be given the center of the stage.

Phil Lang and Pop Hoadley engaged in a good-natured argument as to whether adaptation or original work was the most trying and it was decided that some found one and some the other work the easier. Mr. Lang, in speaking of his adaptation of "Our New Minister," told that his opening scene was based on an unrelated incident that was barely alluded to in the climax, and pointed out that while in the story the casual speech covered the situation, it was necessary in adaptation to show the incident at the very start of the photoplay.

Mr. Hoadley supplied the pendant to this by declaring that in one of his developments of a Klaw & Erlanger play he had stopped with the end of the second act because the third act had no particular bearing on the story. Both were agreed that a proper adaptation was not as easy as it sounded.

Others present were George Hennessy, Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, Arthur Leeds, of the Photoplay Author, B. P. Schulberg, of the Famous Players, and James Cogan, his assistant; E. J. Montague, Mark Reardon, third, and E. M. Wickes, of the Writers' Magazine.

Any person engaged in an editorial capacity or the author of ten scripts produced, but not necessarily released, are eligible for membership. Applications should be addressed to the Secretary, Box 70, Madison Square Station.

Sold All.

Here is a paragraph from a letter that Edward W. Matlack writes. Mr. Matlack is the author of a lot of the Kalem railroad stories, and sells the bulk of his work to them, specializing in that line because of his important railroad connections. Listen to this:

> From your observations in the World, I deduce some of the gang are sore about something. What ails them, anyway! It took me nine months' hard plugging to drive in a wedge. Received my first check December 3rd, last year. Am a rather busy fellow and can't write one every five minutes, but to date have landed about all I turned out, something like a dozen or so single-reel and three two-reel stories. Have one comedy out now. With this exception am sold out and have had to go to work on a three-reel story. All the editors have used me right except Hal Reid—he advised me a script was held—and I guess he had the right dope—it never came back to me—letters and polite languidge never touched. But I didn't let that worry me a lot.

Mutual Crticisms.

Since we clipped from Mr. Lamothe's department the suggestion that mutual criticism is helpful, we have had numerous requests for the names of persons who wish to become the other end of a long distance circle of two. We are afraid that we cannot give much help in this direction. It would entail a lot of correspondence and routine work and we do not believe that the results would be satisfactory. The correspondents should be known to each other, for it is a rather delicate proposition to submit an unpublished idea to an entire stranger. Even those who are absolutely honest in their intentions may be unconscious plagiarists; indeed we know several who are absolutely unable to remember the source of their inspiration. We have made it a rule never to show a script of our own to any person other than the editor until the story has at least been scheduled for release.

He Who Pays.

At the Inquest Club meeting the other night, one of the members started to argue that the public wanted this and that rather than what was being given, and the speaker contended that he should strive to please the public rather than the editors. It was pointed out that when the public bought the scripts it was time enough to try and please them, but that in the meantime it was a better business proposition to try and please the editor who bought the scripts.

Far too many writers are doing their work to please the small section of the public with which they are in touch or to please themselves. The successful man pleases his market and sells to that market. The author cannot possibly keep in touch with the demands of public taste. It is possible for him to keep in touch with the editorial wants. It very frequently happens that the same mail will bring letters from various parts of the country demanding totally different styles and decrying all others. One exhibitor may declare that the public is tired of Western subjects and another ask why more Western subjects are not made. Even were it possible to get an accurate line on the general wants, there is still the important European market to be considered.

Don't write what you want or what you think the editor should want. Write what he does want, as shown from the general style of his company's releases recorded in this paper each week, and you may bat up above 300.

Tightening Up.

You cannot get music from a violin with the strings relaxed and you can not get a story from a plot that is so flabby it spreads all over the surrounding surface. First get your idea, develop it as well as you can and then tighten it up.

Spill a cupful of molasses on a slab and it will spread out until there is a film of syrup all over the surface and running down the sides. Boil that down into taffy and you can work it on the slab into a toothsome and attractive candy. In the same way the flabby idea will spread out thinly over a considerable space, but boiling it down will give it consistency and attraction.

Suppose you start to write a suffragette story (which heaven forbid!) and you have a lot of suffragettes each do some more or less humorous action. Perhaps one woman makes her husband wash the dishes, another requires hers to mind the baby, a third uses her better half for a dressmaker's dummy, and a fourth spouse has to do the cooking. It runs on this way for fifteen or twenty scenes and then the husbands arise in revolt and form an Anti league. That sounds funny, but you have made two mistakes. In the first place, you divide your interest. You have no strong central character, but fifteen or twenty men in whom we are as much interested as their fifteen or twenty wives, but not one of them stands out above the rest, so there is no centering of the interest. That, of itself, is bad enough, but since fifteen or twenty families are shown there must be fifteen or twenty interior sets made, one at least for each family, perhaps more. The story is spilled all over the slab.

But take John Jones. He is happy until his wife gets the craze. At once she puts him through a course of sprouts. He must pose as the mannequin, he cares for the babies and washes the dishes and gets the dinners and all that sort of thing. We have all of the incidents, but they happen—as well they might—to just one person, our leading character. Meantime his wife is made the technical villain and goes to all the meetings and is made president in recognition of her success in taming her husband. Each fresh success of hers makes us more eager for her downfall and each fresh success throws the sympathy more strongly to the poor Jones if the action is properly written. At last Jones rises in revolt. He is not permitted to go to the lodge. He leaves the dishes to care for themselves and the babies in the care of a sympathetic neighbor and organizes a society on his own account and wipes out the suffragettes.

Now the flabby incident has been tightened up. Each happening has a direct bearing on the person in whom we are most vitally interested and each new development advances the plot toward the climax. Through the centering of the interest and the introduction of the element of struggle, the latter, the fight for the mastery, we have given form to the formless and interest to the uninteresting.

That, of course, is but a single example. Each story presents a problem of its own. It may be that the action is too diffuse and shows too many different happenings where a better effect would be gained through the selection of the most promising line of development and sticking to that. Just yesterday we saw a story in which the elision of 90 per cent. of the incident enabled the author to take the remaining 10 percent and add 90 per cent. of development, with the result that the story interested instead of tired.

You cannot instinctively select the best line of development until you have gained the faculty through patient work on earlier efforts, but each story you write gives you a better knowledge of the art of plotting and advances you one step nearer to eventual success. The failures sometimes help vastly more than do the acceptances—which is a hard thing to realize at first.

Then write a vision and see in how many ways you can escape the need for a vision, getting over the idea in other action. As William Lord Wright has said "visions are appreciated by the audiences, but not by the editors," so please the editor by eliminating the vision while retaining the sense. This may come a little harder than the leader, but it can be done and done intelligently if you have a proper idea for the camera.

Take your old scripts and write them over. If you can think at all you'll find plenty of faults. If you cannot find fault with your script learn to find fault, for the faults are there, and you will not get ahead until you have learned to locate and eliminate them.

According to your mental capacity there is a certain amount of work you must do before you find success. Be prepared to do it cheerfully and eagerly and you'll find it rather a pleasant game than work—but you can make it work if you think wrongly.

Numbering Inserts.

Do you number your inserts? We know several who do, not as scenes, but separately, the first insert being number one, though it may follow scene ten, and the second two, though it may be five scenes beyond. This is not only unncessary, but confusing. The better writers give no statistical heed to leaders and inserts. They use only those that are necessary and let it go at that. A sense of balance tells when they are too many, but that same sense of balance will prevent the use of the unnecessary leaders, and so it shows that the story with too many leaders must be given a different style of treatment.

When a script has been accepted and made ready for production, the lead sheet will be sent to the leader room. On this all of the leaders and such inserts as the director does not make are all clearly written and numbered, but this work can best be done by the director or reconstructor after the exact production has been decided on. It is something wherein your numbers merely serve to confuse. Keep them out.

Don't Air Fads.

Just because you are strongly interested in the fire department, the temperance question or anything like that do not suppose that all others share your fad. Last week we saw a script that we thought was the effort of a friend to play a joke on us, but he meant it in sober earnest and when we pointed to the production cost he declared that he could supply all the needful things, such as a barn to burn, an automobile fire engine and a few simple little things like that. But even with the costs cut the fact remained that the story was more of a preachment than a plot. Of course, if you can find an editor who shares your fad that's a different matter, but until you do, keep your fads to yourself.

Please Stop.

The True Feature Film Company asks that authors take notice that it is an import and not a producing company, therefore, it does not wish any scripts and cannot use those that a lot of writers persist in sending in.

This should be applied to other feature companies. Use a little judgment and you'll not have to wail about lost scripts. If you send to a non-producing company it is your own fault and yours alone if the stuff goes into the waste basket.

Brevity.

When you are told that a brief script sells best do not get the idea that the brief script is one from which so many words have been extracted that the meaning is no longer clear. The average scene should be written in three to six lines, but if you need fifty in order to get the idea over, take the full fifty. It is not the number of words that makes a script valuable, but the directness of the instructions combined with clearness.

Checks.

If the check you receive represents your goal, you may get the checks, but you'll lose something worth infinitely more than the money—the pride of achievement.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No inquiries can be replied to by mail. Look for your answer here. No question can be replied to that necessitates the handling of the manuscript. Always give your name and address. It will not be published. A list of addresses, to which photoplays should be sent, will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND SELF ADDRESSED ENVELOPE. The request should be made to the paper direct and not to this department, nor to the Answers Man.

ROSE.—We have not the Victor cast. Mr. Moore will play in the same company with Miss Pickford. There are several chapters on plot development in Technique of the Photoplay. We will pass your suggestion along to the reviewers.

H. L. B.—There is no list of visualized fiction compiled because there is no demand for one. When a company wants to dramatize a book it can make a vastly better script than you could offer them. For a text book on photoplay writing see the bottom of this column, but do not start in unless you can offer original ideas and not merely adaptations.

A. J. G.—You have nothing on the Answers Man. Got three scripts back from Mutual this morning and not a rejection slip to the three. Recently the offices were moved and possibly the rejection cards were mislaid. No insult was intended. The check mark probably indicated that the script had been read. It was not a check mark that the recent paragraph had reference to, but a series of stenographic signs, apparently.

A. G. D. R.—At the time of your first submission Thanhouser was reading for Apollo. It also read for Majestic. Fred Mace has gone back to Los Angeles, playing the Apollo brand. Apollo is read by the Mutual in New York now. Possibly the other company refused your script because you did not prepay the postage fully. Have each script weighed on a beam scale and not one of those spring affairs.

RUBEENA.—We have not the casts you ask for. Sorry. Mr. Kerrigan is with Victor, working in Los Angeles. Biograph has not gone West yet. Miss Selbie seems still to be with Essanay. We do not know where that Vitagraph was made. Edison has no studio in Orange. The home studio is in New York City, just across from Bronx Park. Miss Fuller is at the home studio.

FANNETTE.—Sign your name, please. Charles Ray was Cyril and Miss Hazel Buckham Mildred in "The Bondsman." Same players in "Exoneration."

F. E. E.—The only way to avoid having your scripts plagiarized is to deal with reputable companies. We believe that most companies deal honestly, even most of the "wildcats." Most instances of apparent theft are really cases of duplication of idea by two or more authors.

H. H. H.—The Exclusive service is very exclusive. We print the stories, but have not been able to locate the releases. The service is to be abandoned.

E. R. W.—Try any of the Los Angeles companies with a Philippine story. The Western Universal makes several brands of modern plays as well as the Western stuff. Query your script in a week or so. They are usually prompt.

LOMA.—That Lubin was an Exclusive for which we have no cast. Address Mr. Wilbur in care of Pathe. Mr. Moore has not left Kalem and Mr. Blackwell is now a Kalem director.

E. M.—The first effect is a close-up. The second is a bust or insert according to whether it is made in the scene or by the leader room. If a bust it is a special numbered scene. An insert is not numbered. Close-ups are numbered. The last effect is a panoramic view or technically a panoram, the word being both noun and verb.

MRS. D.—Scripts in long hand are not read now. They were when scripts were scarce, but that was a couple of years ago.

B. B.—All companies are in the market for dramas. For the sort of dramas each company wants, read up the stories of the films each week. You send the stamped and addressed envelope for return when you send the script. Not afterward. Send an envelope after the script not so accompanied and after this send a return with every going envelope and in the same envelope with the script. Send a stamped and self-addressed envelope to this department and you will be given the address of the local circle of the Inquest Club. Mr. Lamothe will be glad to answer these very elementary questions and save you time and postage.

A. L. F.—We know nothing of the standing of the company you mention. Warner's Features handles the films made by several companies. They do not make film themselves. No company would buy your adaptation of a copyrighted book and the right to make an adaptation would cost you from $50 to $200 cash. Apply to the stated holder of the copyright. Don't waste your time making adaptations. Companies are buying ideas, not technique from the outside. They have plenty of technique, but not enough ideas.

L. L.—Nix on that, Goldie. This is not the Moving Picture Story Magazine. Miss "Beets" Wall was Owen Moore's sister in "Caprice," and Whitney Raymond was his brother. Plays showing Miss Sweet are released, but you do not happen to see them.

L. E. P.—There was a cameramen's club in Los Angeles. We do not know if it still exists. There are no kangaroo in the Rainey films, we think. They are not habitats of Africa. Dr. Stockton's educational catalogue does not list any films showing kangaroo, but he thinks that some of the zoological garden pictures may have had them.

W. R. B.—Never mind the truces that never came. Shoot your questions.

B. B. M.—Try Selig, Biograph, Mutual, Edison with the script. The camera can take storm stuff, but it is not advisable to write much in.

Suppose the brushes of your motor or generator showed excessive sparking. How would you proceed to locate the trouble, and how would you remedy it? Also, suppose there was a ring of fire which extended clear around, or appeared to extend clear around a d.c. commutator, what would you conclude the trouble to be, and how would you remedy it?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 6.

L. C. LaGrou, Albany, N. Y., replied briefly but correctly, with sketches. The answer of Harold Weiss was correct as far as it went. W. L. Johnson, Toronto, Ontario, sends in an excellent reply, accompanied by well-drawn sketches. Fort Worth, Texas, also contributed a very complete reply, with sketches. Edward Collins, Greenville, Texas, reply and drawings were good, though the reply was quite brief. Still it was very good indeed. He also sent correct answers to all previous questions.

These were all the replies worthy of the roll of honor. I have been surprised and disappointed at the replies sent from cities on the Pacific coast, Middle West and mountain region. I had expected excellent answers from that country, but to date, out of all the hundreds received, not one was such as to show the man to be possessed of a really comprehensive knowledge of the question he attempted to answer. This is, as I said, a very genuine surprise for me. However, keep at it, boys. It is no disgrace not to know, but it is a disgrace to fail to take advantage of the opportunity to learn.

Reply to Question No. 6, by John B. Ballou, St. Louis, Mo.

The question:

Explain how the bearings of a motor or generator are lubricated, illustrating the same with sketches. Suppose you were using a very heavy oil for lubricating a motor or generator, what might be the effect in cold weather? Suppose one of the bearings of your motor or generator got hot, and you knew there was plenty of oil to what would you attribute the trouble?

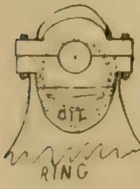
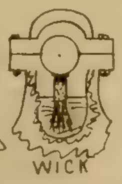
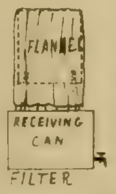
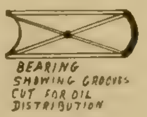
The answer:

There are three methods of lubricating the bearings of motors and generators, viz.: The drip system, in which the oil is fed to the bearing from an oil-cup, or from a central reservoir with pipes radiating therefrom to the various motor or generator bearings. As a rule, however, where this latter system is used the reservoir pipes lead into some type of sight-feed oil-cup on the bearing, and the cups are filled by an attendant from time to time, as required. The attendant also adjusts the feed of the cups. This system is usually used in large plants and in connection with a filter, the oil, after having passed through and lubricated the bearing, being conveyed, by means of suitable pipes, back to an oil filter, through which it passes and is freed from all sediment and impurities. Where such system is used, and a good filter is employed, oil of good grade may be used as many as six to seven times. New oil is, however, introduced every day, in a proportion of about one-sixth to one-seventh of the entire bulk. A cheap and thoroughly efficient oil filter is made by purchasing a metal can, with open top, of suitable size, and ordinary flannel, such as grandma used to use for winter petticoats. Drape the flannel over the can, letting one edge bang down clear to the bottom of the can inside all around, and the other about six inches below the bottom of the can all around, outside. Pour the dirty oil into the can, set filter up from the floor and place a receiving can under it. Capillary attraction will do the rest. Such a filter is somewhat slow, but its action is complete, so far as filtering every particle of dirt out of the oil is concerned. It cannot be used with a very heavy oil, however. See illustration for details.









Another, and popular method of lubricating bearings, and the one generally employed for motor-generator sets, is by means of rings, as shown in the sketch. A is the motor or generator shaft, B the oil-well, located in a recess in the casting immediately beneath the bearing, and C the ring, which rests on the journal, slots being cut in the boxing to accommodate the rings. As a rule there are two rings to the bearing. They extend down into the oil and, since they rest on the journal, naturally they revolve with it, and thus constantly bring up oil, a portion of which is deposited on the journal, whence it is distributed, by means of suitable grooves cut in the boxing, as shown at D in the sketch. The oil eventually returns to the oil-well, of course, whence it is again and again drawn up. The sediment, consisting for the most part of particles of metal worn from the bearings, settles to the bottom of the well, and the well ought, therefore, to be cleaned out occasionally. This may be done by washing out with benzine or gasoline, a drain cock being provided. The third method, and the one almost invariably used on very small motors, is the wick system. In this scheme the oil is contained in a well, the same as where rings are used, but is brought up by means of a wick, which must be in contact with the journal at its upper end and reach the oil at its lower end. This system works very well on small motors, but the wick must have occasional attention to insure its being kept in good order, since it will gum up in time, accumulate dirt and lose its contact with the shaft. A moderately light oil must be used with a wick system of lubrication. If a heavy lubricant is used it will only rise when the bearing becomes warm enough to heat the oil and make it thin enough to be susceptible to capillary action. The wick is usually contained in a round, metal holder. It must fit this holder just snugly enough to stay in place, since if too tight capillary action will be hindered, at least to some extent, while if too loose the wick will drop away from contact with the journal, thus stopping all lubrication.

If I were using a very heavy oil with a ring system, and the machine was in a place where it was subject to very low temperature (I would not use that kind of oil under those circumstances), I would expect the rings to stick in the heavy oil, and refuse to revolve, until, by reason of lack of lubrication, the journals got warm enough to heat up the oil. If my journals got hot, and there was plenty of oil (in the oil-wells you presumably mean), [Ball one. You have me there. That is what I mean all right, but did not put it clearly —Ed.], I would, if it be a drip system expect to find (1), a stoppage of oil-flow somewhere (2), oil "worn out," i. e., used too often; remedy: add new oil at once. In this latter I assume the use of a filter. (3), Overload or tight belt on the motor or generator. If it be a ring system I would expect to find (1), a ring or rings stuck (2), oil in well worn out, requiring immediate renewal (3), overload or tight belt. If it be a wick system (1), Wick in bad condition, dirty, gummed, or not making good contact with the journal. (2), Oil in well worn out, requiring renewal. (3), Overload or tight belt.

In conclusion let me say that these questions are, in my humble opinion, absolutely the best thing that has been pulled off to date. Don't let the opposition get your goat. You will please use the fictitious name appended, and keep my real monicker to yourself, as I belong to local 143 and, while I don't think any of our St. Louis boys, who are, taken as a whole, a pretty decent progressive bunch, are opposed to you, still some of the boneheads of other locals, who are (more shame to 'em) opposed to education, might try to invoke that joke of a "law" they pulled off in Seattle, to the everlasting disgrace of the International, and every man who fathered it. I don't at all like to hide behind a barrel, but there's no use in deliberately butting into trouble, therefore the phoney handle goes.

Well, it certainly is a shame that I cannot give the right name credit for the splendid reply to question No. 6. You have contributed information in your reply which will be of benefit to thousands of operators in this and other countries, yet by reason of an utterly silly "law" you are obliged to forego the credit. That oil filter is in itself a splendid thing, though possibly not of much use to the operator. It is, I happen to know, a practical device and fully equal in efficiency to any of the high-priced filters, although it costs next to nothing. Your description of the various methods of oiling is remarkably clear and complete. And now for the joke of it all: Those who oppose the spread of knowledge will soak in all they can get from the various replies, and from the department in general. They don't object to my supplying them with knowledge, but "for the love of heaven don't give it to the other fellow." That is, and always has been their position. Don't for one single instant imagine they will ever capture my goat, friend Ballou. To me that particular crowd is a joke, though a very bad one. The best men are with me, and many have offered to come out into the open and support me, but I have refused to involve them. I'm amply and abundantly able to fight my own scraps. I'm going right straight ahead on lines I have carefully mapped out, and when it's all over you see who is the winner.

Very Important.

From the wilds of the [illegible] State of New Jersey, comes the following, contributed by Brother W. S. James, operator [illegible] Theater, at Camden. We have headed the article "Very Important" for the reason that, while we cannot personally vouch for the correctness of the scheme set forth, still it is the first [illegible] for the matching of the condensers with the objective lens of a moving picture projection machine. Personally, I [illegible] James to believe this scheme will work, and I therefore commend it to operators for experiment. I would [illegible] as many of our correspondents as [illegible]. It is a matter of very great concern, both from the viewpoint of the operator and exhibitor, and this department has a number of correspondents perfectly capable of making an intelligent trial of the plan. Brother James came to the editor's office and dictated the description as follows:

> In the sketch I have drawn the light ray after the accepted fashion which crosses the rays neatly and precisely in the center of the objective lens. Now, with a clear, white screen, the gate of the machine being open, and the light projected through the objective lens, I take a piece of thin board with a perfectly straight edge, and attaching it to the left hand side of the lens port hole, letting it extend something like two feet in front of the lens, and back past the side of the machine to a point about even with the front edge of the condensing lens. If the lens port be a small one, that is to say, one which only accommodates one lens, there being no stereopticon lens in use, then this stick would have to be made in the form of line A in the sketch, the offset being wide enough to allow A-2 to pass the projection machine. Line A-2 represents the straight edge as you would look down upon the top of it, X X being braces to stiffen it. I then create a rather dense smoke in front of the objective lens, either with a cigar, a Bee smoker, or in any convenient way, so that the light ray will be clearly shown by the smoke in the air. This smoke must be quite heavy, in order to define the right light ray clearly. Having created a sufficient smudge I sight across the top edge of the light ray and line the stick exactly with the top edge of the ray. Next I shove the lamp-house over to the stereopticon side, or, if there be no stereopticon side, and the lamp-house cannot be moved over, then I remove the machine head temporarily, and, having previously blackened a piece of tin by painting it with lamp black mixed with turpentine, or by smoking in the flame of an ordinary candle, I hold it between the crossing point of the rays and the condenser, a distance equal to [illegible] of the objective from the crossing point, and adjust my light by pulling the lamp back and forward, until there is no ghost shown on the tin. My reason for painting the tin black is that a ghost shows quicker on black than on any other color. After having removed the ghost entirely I slide the lamp-house back or forward until the bottom edge of the condenser light ray lines exactly with the aforesaid straightedge. If the lamp-house cannot be brought into such position that the stick will line with the bottom edge of the light ray, then I know that my condensers are of the wrong focal length, and I proceed to try other combinations, until I can line the top edge of the stick with the bottom edge of the ray.
> If the condensers are of too long focal length then when the light ray touches the stick opposite the machine aperture, or the point where the machine aperture would be, there will be space between the stick and the light ray out near the condenser. If the condenser be of too short focal length, then the opposite condition will prevail. Having substituted the right condensers, or having succeeded in lining the light ray with the stick by moving the lamp-house, I then project the light to the screen, and if the operation has been performed as directed, you positively will have a clear screen. The plan does not end here because, by reason of different carbon combinations and different setting of the lamp, it may be quite possible to secure a very great difference in light density at the screen, I therefore, proceed as follows: secure a camera or kodak of any kind and get a box of plates or films, preferably, though not necessarily, fairly rapid. Now, with the light on the screen, make an exposure of ½ second. Now change your carbon combination, that is to say, supposing you are using ⅝ and [illegible] another size, say ¾ and ⅝, if you are using high amperage, or two ¾ or two ⅝, each time making the exposure of ½ second, the camera being set in the observation port of the operating room. Before beginning this test set your camera's diaphragm, preferably wide open, and don't change the diaphragm, because if you should make one exposure with a wide open diaphragm and the next one with it partly closed the experiments would be of no value at all. Having made as many exposures as you wish, with different combinations of carbons and different settings of the lamp, develop all the plates. In developing it is absolutely necessary that they all be developed in the same solution, in the same way, or, in other words, simultaneously. They should also all be given precisely the same time in the fixing bath; in fact, everything in connection with all the plates must be the same. Having finished the development and the fixing you can tell by the relative density of the same which one represents the greatest light intensity on the screen. For instance, supposing you made four exposures and number three showed the greatest density, that is, the screen showed the blackest in the plate; this would mean that the combination used when number 3 was taken gave the greatest light intensity on the screen. In this test you must be very careful and not get the plates mixed. You should carefully mark the plates as they are removed from the holder, since if you get them mixed the experiment falls flat. You must remember also that in the plate everything is reversed and the denser the image of the screen on the plate the more brilliant the screen really is.

Brother James also brought another proposition which looks, from the sketch submitted, to be practicable, although he does not wish this published. It is an attachment which can be used in connection with the regular projection outfit to project the actual act of writing on the screen. That is to say, by the use of this the hand appears on the screen of the theater and writes the message. Brother James tells me he has tested this device thoroughly and it works perfectly, and I see no reason why it should not. As I understand the matter, he will be glad to supply working directions for constructing this device at a price.

As I stated in the beginning, I regard this data of very real importance and recommend it for experiment by our correspondents. I would particularly like to have brother Woods, of San Francisco, experiment with the condenser, and report his findings to this department. We also have many other correspondents perfectly capable of making experiments with matters of this kind, and we would be very glad indeed to have them try this out and report. It would be impossible to name them all. I give brother Woods' name because he has proven to me beyond any question of a doubt that he is a man thoroughly capable of handling such matters as this and making a report upon which we may all depend. It will, of course, be understood that I am referring to the condenser matter. The screen test is only of interest to each individual house, but it has, I think, a very real value.

From Hamilton, Ontario.

C. Wallis, Hamilton, Ont., writes:

> Your criticism of my letter, page 846, November 22nd issue, is correct. The ink will spread if you use a pen which discharges ink too freely. The one I used is made by Reeves & Sons, of London. It is very small, being only 9/64th of an inch, and having a very fine point. Now, as regards that list of books. Since writing I have secured a set of the International Correspondence School's students' bound volumes on electric lighting and railways. They are very good, but these books can only be secured in two ways, viz.: (a) by taking a course in electric lighting and railways at a cost of about $75, or, (b) secure the volumes from a student who has no more use for them who has taken the course and stopped studying. The schools will not sell the bound volumes except to those who take the course. The International Text Book Company also have a library of technology, the electric department being composed of thirteen volumes, which can be secured singly, at $5 each, or $65 for the set, its only fault being that it may be too technical for the average man. (That is usually the fault—that and the fact that these volumes probably contain ten pages which are of no value to the operator to every one page which is.—Ed.) The Wagner Electric Company, of St. Louis, Mo., inform me that the Foster Handbook, published by D. Van Nostrand, of New York City, and the Stanford Handbook, published by the McGraw Publishing Company, New York City, have some excellent information on converters and motor generator sets.

As to the ink, possibly such a pen as you describe might do the work, but I am sure you could not write on raw glass with any ordinary instrument. As to the books, I will invite the two publishers to submit copies for examination and will then reoort. Later: It has just been suggested to em that it is easy to write or draw on glass which has first been heated. I don't know, but it might work all right.

An Honest Admission.

Fort Worth, Texas, contributes the following:

> I hereby agree to crawl out from under my stone, have my candle lit, and let my light shine forth that I may help others and learn something, in the meantime, myself; for since you have begun to tackle the questions I find how very little I really know, and I am not willing to be left behind.

Fort Worth then answers question No. 1 correctly, but frankly admits he got the answer out of a book. Says, however, he will stay with it until he understands the proposition thoroughly. Question No. 2 is answered in the main correctly. That is the right spirit, Fort Worth, and it is precisely this result I expect to accomplish by these questions, viz.: to show operators, or at least a great many of them, how little they really do know, after all, about the technical part of their business, and by so doing to induce them to study and learn. If I can coax any considerable number of them to "crawl out from under their stone, have their candle lit, and let their light shine forth," I will have, I firmly believe, done a service to the moving picture industry, as well as to the operators themselves. I know there are those who object to this, and many of them are honest in their objection, too, but I think, as time goes on, they will discover that their fears are not only not well founded, but, in fact, are not founded at all. The only fear I have in connection with this series of questions is of the mail resulting therefrom becoming a very genuine burden. In fact, the mail of the department now is so large that it is a very real task to decide what to use and what not to use. The mere publication of the letters which reach the department, without any comments on them whatever, would fill probably five times the space the department now occupies, and that is not counting the answers to questions either. So, brothers, you must not feel offended if your communication does not appear promptly, or for that matter does not appear at all. It is simply for the reason that the editor, as much as he would like to, could not find space for it.

Edison Improvements.

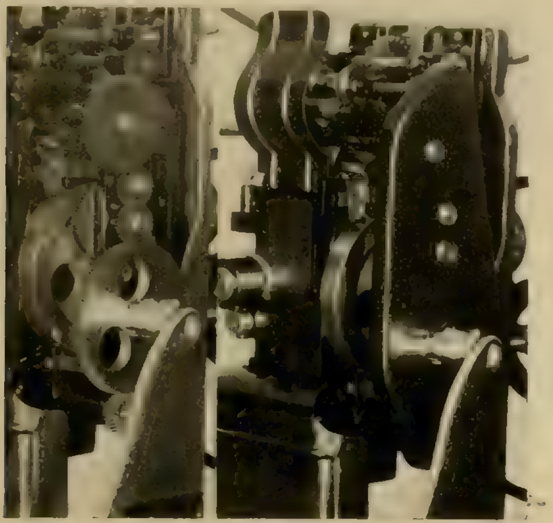
The Edison Company informs the department that, commencing November 10th or thereabouts, all Edison Model "D" kinetoscope machines shipped from Orange will show two important improvements, viz.: a guard over the train of gears on the operating side, and the following gears made helical, or, in more familiar terms, spiral, instead of spur as heretofore; large driving gear, first and second intermediate pinions, large intermediate gear, upper sprocket shaft pinion, take-up sprocket shaft pinion, revolving shutter shaft gear, revolving shutter intermediate gear, and revolving shutter driving gear. These gears are made very heavy, and the substitution of helical (spiral) for spur gears will bring about a material decrease in the noise of operating, as well as adding to the life of the gears.



As will be seen by the illustration, the guards improve the appearance of the machine, as well as protect the operator from the chances of having his fingers caught. The list price of the machine, model D, will remain unchanged, notwithstanding the improvements. A little later, the company informs the department, they will be in position to quote prices on converting old mechanisms (model B) to this latter type.

A Marvelous Performance.

Recently Samuel Levin, general manager of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer circuit of moving picture theaters in Chicago, called on the editor, who had the very genuine pleasure of his company during the afternoon and evening. Mr. Levin is not only a thoroughly capable manager, but he is also a man thoroughly well liked by practically all of the thousands of people with whom he comes in contact, both socially and in a business way. Friend Levin has been with the Jones, Linick & Schaefer people for many years. For a long time he was the manager of the Orpheum, Chicago's foremost moving picture theater, and the house which pays a larger rental, considering its size, than perhaps any other moving picture theater in the world. He was afterwards advanced to the position of general manager, which he has now filled acceptably, if I remember rightly, for a period of more than two years. It is a real pleasure to say these nice things about brother Levin, because he more than deserves them. The editor of this department has not had a more enjoyable privilege in lo these many moons than that of entertaining Samuel Levin, of Chicago.

But that is not what I started out to say. In the evening, Levin and I went up to visit the Regent Theater at 116th Street and Seventh Avenue, which is the playhouse recently placed in charge of Mr. S. L. Rothapfel. Frankly, we did not expect to find anything very much out of the ordinary, and were therefore treated to the surprise of our innocent young lives. We came in sight of the really beautiful front of the Regent at about 8:40 in the evening and, much to our surprise, the large lobby was jammed, with a crowd extending out half way across the twenty foot sidewalk, awaiting a chance to get into the theater, the prices of admission to which are 10, 15 and 25 cents. I will not attempt to describe the front of the theater, because it has already been done, nor will I try to set forth the thoroughly charming beauty of the interior of the Regent. It was a very genuine surprise to both Mr. Levin and myself, but what followed was more of an eye opener, and I want to say right here and now that I am firmly convinced that we witnessed the most thorough and completely perfect projection of a photoplay that has ever yet been accomplished. The six-reel feature, "The Last Days of Pompeii"—the Kleine-Ambrosio production—was being shown. The screen was a mirroroide, which Mr. Rothapfel said he had changed somewhat, by removing all its gloss. The projectors were two Simplex. The operators were Messrs. Ivan W. Bowen and Lester W. Bowen. The light was the most beautiful it has even been the pleasure of the editor of this department to look at. It was white as snow, brilliant, and of thoroughly pleasing tone. During the entire two hours of the show I did not observe one single thing to criticise in the projection, and what makes this performance of the Messrs. Bowen more truly remarkable is the fact that they are working under considerable difficulty. Mr. Rothapfel has located the operating room on the ground floor of the theater under the balcony (a thing that I see would be practical in almost any theater), and the screen was placed so high that it was necessary to cut a special observation port, to look through which obliged the operator to stoop considerably in order to see the upper portion of the screen. I wish to compliment the Messrs. Bowen most highly on their performance. I do not think they knew I was in the house. It was the kind of projection that brings in the dollars.

And right here I wish to take issue with my friend, W. Stephen Bush, who, in a masterly description of this beautiful house, page 714 of November 15th issue, said:

> Now what was the picture? "A Journey Through Crimea." To be sure, the picture was finely projected; the light was perfect; the operator had his machine under perfect control, and maintained just the right speed, but, after all, in the exhibitors' catalogue the picture was nothing more and nothing less than a "scenic." It had been released on the 7th of October, and was in no way different from hundreds of other good scenic pictures. But for the frame in which it was set the program of four reels could have been had by any exhibitor who cared to pay for it. It was well selected, but no better selected than scores of other programs such as are offered to patrons of motion picture theaters every day in the week.

Mr. Bush then goes on to ask wherein in fact consisted the difference, or what were the added attractions, and then answers himself by saying that the manner of presentation was most prominent; the singers making their debut in leafy bowers at each side of the proscenium were revealed to the audience by a very clever spotlight arrangement, etc.

Now, I do not know exactly what brother Bush meant by "manner of presentation," but let me say right here that while it is true that any other exhibitor could have gotten the same films, there is not any exhibitor in this city, or in any other city, so far as I have seen, who could, or at least would project them in the same way. Suppose another exhibitor had gotten these same films with the same surroundings—the same house, the same singers and orchestra, all equally well managed, and had had an incompetent, or careless operator who could not produce that snow-white, brilliant light, and who could not, or would not maintain a perfectly clear field, with his screen free from shadows, and who could not or would not so regulate his speed so as to bring out the beauty of action in the films; what good would all those beautiful surroundings and that perfect orchestra have been under those conditions? Mr. Rothapfel began with perfect projection and surrounded that with other perfect things, and the result is nothing short of marvelous.

For Marianna, Arkansas.

A. Cohn, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, contributes the following:

> Marianna, Ark., asked advice as to how to get rid of a flashing on his screen, which same he has at all speeds, page 732, November 15th issue. If there is no travel ghost I would call his trouble a flicker, and he is likely to get that if he has a two-blade outside shutter. The Nicholas Power Company puts out shutter blades of various widths, and it will be very easy for him to get one with a main blade 4¼ inches and flicker blades not less than 3¼ inches each, which will stop his trouble. I am operating at the Allen Theater, which was opened November 15th. Calgary may well be proud of this house, as it is the nicest theater in this section. The decorations are magnificent and the big pipe organ simply grand; the orchestra also is all to the good. As to the projection, it is not in order for me to praise myself, but ——. I am pulling 45 to 50 amperes d.c. from an 88 ampere motor-generator set, manufactured by the Canadian Electric Company. The throw is more than 110 feet, and I have an 18-foot picture. In order to secure the necessary brilliancy I need ⅞ carbons and the manager does not know where to get them. Can you inform us? The equipment is two Power's Six A with motor drives. What resistance would you advise for high amperage? We have two Power's rheostats, one for each lamp, but cannot get any more juice than I am now pulling without overheating the instrument. What do you think about two rheostats in multiple on each lamp?

In the first place, brother Cohn, I would not advise the use of more than 50 amperes d.c.; still, if you wish to do so, you can use the capacity of your present rheostat and connect in another in multiple, the second resistance to have as great capacity as you wish additional current. For instance, if your present rheostat gives 45, then a 12 ampere rheostat connected in multiple with it would boost the current to 57, or a 15 ampere one would make it 60, etc. I have referred your inquiry concerning ⅞ carbons to the importer, who informs me that he will take care of you. If you want greater screen brilliancy, I would suggest that, instead of raising the amperage to abnormal proportions, you install some one of the semi-reflecting types of screen.

Nothing Doing.

Theodore E. Peiser, San Francisco, Cal., sends a clipping from the San Francisco Post of November 8th. This clipping relates to a scheme that was successfully worked out by Thomas A. Edison for exhibiting motion pictures on the sea beach, with fog banks for the screen. Friend Peiser then comments:

> Strange things there are in our little world. Nicht wahr, meine lieber? (What ever in the name of Germany that may stand for,—Ed.) Using a fog or cloud of dust (I'd like to see them try it during one of the sandstorms I have seen in Kern County, Cal., they would prefer the fog), instead of a screen.

Those schemes are all right to amuse newspaper readers, but the fly in that particular ointment is found by the practical projection man to be the fact that a fog bank is movable, and generally does move more or less, too, whereas a screen must be located at a given distance from the lens or the picture won't focus. Supposing this stunt could really be pulled off at all, it would only be possible occasionally when the side of a fog bank chanced to be located at some projection distance from the machine—a rather improbable and uncertain thing.

Damaged Film.

From the Middle West comes the following:

> Enclosed find piece of damaged film which I cut out of one of my reels before I put the same on the projector. Of late I have received a number of films in this condition. Will you kindly tell me what causes the trouble, and the remedy? I will then try and find out who shows the films before we get them, so I can stop the trouble if possible. What do you think of a Power's Six which has run every night for three years without installing a single new part? Well, that is the condition in my operating room, though it is not because I want it to be that way. I have not even so much as an extra screw or condenser lens, and the only thing I can get in any quantity is carbons. Oil I must buy by the 25 cents worth. Recently while in a town a few miles from here I strolled into a picture house, and entered into conversation with the manager. He showed me his "coop" (that is what he called it), where I found a 60-cycle compensarc working on 133-cycle current. The lenses of the projector were so dirty you could hardly see through them. It so happened that I had a clean, soft cloth in my pocket and I removed the lenses and cleaned them, whereupon he demanded to know what I was doing, and if I "wanted to put the machine on the bum." He is running six reels for 5 cents, changes every day, and pays about $18 per week for his service, and then this "manager" (save the mark!) wonders why he does not do a good business. We are trying to organize a local of the operators here and expect to succeed some time this week. I think your question stunt is simply great and believe you should publish the answers. I tried to secure books on electricity from our local library, but they had nothing of any value. I then went to some of the electricians and put the questions to them, but they could not (maybe "would not" would fit better.—Ed.) answer them, so you see we little fellows are rather up against it; therefore, I again say, by all means publish the answers. I file the Projection Department by cutting it out of the magazine and putting the leaves in a "Grip" individual file, which can be bought for 15 cents at almost any book store. It makes a very neat looking job, and does not take up much room.

I have given this rather long letter space because it deals with some matters which one has to keep hammering on. As regards the film, frankly, I do not know what has done the damage. I have seen film injured in the same way without being able to determine what caused it. In this instance, at least, I am of the opinion that the fault lies in the film itself. The sprocket holes on the right hand side (as it goes in the machine) are split through, very nearly at their left hand edge; but not all of them are split, nor is the split in all cases straight, therefore it looks as though there was an inherent fault in the celluloid. I am sending the sample to the Lubin Company with a request that they express an opinion. And now as to that manager of yours. I would respectfully suggest that a single carbon and a nickel's worth of oil might be bought at a time. It is really a shame to invest a whole quarter, all in one tremendous lump, in oil, and as to buying a dozen carbons all at one time, why, it is simply reckless. The operator might get hungry and eat some of the large surplus, or he might actually steal a portion of that large stock. Then, too, look at the space occupied by this wholesale purchase. The "manager" in the other town is too unspeakably impossible to even bother with.

As To Theater Lighting.

It seems to the editor of this department as if the time has come when theater managers of this, and other countries, ought to look very carefully into the matter of expense in lighting. I know of no instance in this country at least, where current is furnished a moving picture theater by a light or power company at less than 6 cents per k.w., and I know of instances where managers are paying as high as 12 cents, the average being, I believe, somewhere between 8 and 10 cents, say 9 cents. Now, it has been thoroughly demonstrated that current can be produced in isolated plants, under favorable conditions, as low as 2½ cents per k.w., and I think it may be asserted as a positive fact that, given a reasonably efficient outfit, several of which are now on the market, it is entirely possible to furnish current for a moving picture theater at 4 cents per k.w., this estimate to include all expense, including maintenance and depreciation of the plant. This probably would not prove to be a very largely paying proposition for the small storeroom theater which projects with a low amperage, and does not carry many auditorium or front lights. When we came, however, to the more modern picture theater, in which anywhere from 40 to 60 amperes of current are used for projection, and almost as much for front and auditorium lighting, a very different proposition is presented, and the saving effected by a reduction of current charges from even 9 to 4 cents is an item well worth the consideration of a manager.

The operation of these plants is not a difficult thing, if the man in charge takes a little pains to study up and inform himself on the action of gas and gasoline engines and on electric generators, and then mixes the acquired knowledge with a liberal portion of common sense and industry. Gas and gasoline engines were, up to a few years ago, rather crude and unreliable pieces of mechanism. The only thing one could be certain of was when you tried to start them they might go—and might not. The advent of the automobile, however, has served to refine and improve the gasoline engine, and along with that goes the gas engine, to such an extent that it is today a thoroughly reliable engine, if given even ordinarily intelligent care. For instance, to show you how reliable these engines really are, the editor of this department, who, while he used to be a locomotive engineer and has a good working knowledge of mechanics, still did not know any more about the operation of a gasoline engine than the law allows, and that was very little indeed, purchased a motorcycle last fall, and, while he has, up to date, driven it more than 4,500 miles, not one single time has that engine failed to respond and do its duty manfully. Of course, he has, meanwhile, studied up on gasoline engines, and in a very short time has acquired sufficient knowledge to make that blooming chu[illegible] his hand, and is figuring on teaching the thing to sing "God Save the King." Joking aside, however, the short time it has taken the editor to master the intricacies of a gasoline engine (a twin-cylinder) shows how readily the average operator could master the operation of one of the light-plant engines, if he really put his mind to it. As has already been set forth in this department, one light plant manufacturer has offered to submit his plant to the observation of this department for approval or the disapproval of its performance. Others will doubtless follow suit, and, when the fact has been thus established that these plants are easy of operation, economical, and to a considerable extent foolproof, I shall certainly recommend theater managers to install their own individual plants, rather than pay large prices for current from light and power companies.

One of the first questions asked, however, is this: Suppose my light plant breaks down, what would I do? The answer to that question is childishly simple; retain the service wires of the power company, and connect them to your house by means of a double-throw switch, which will instantly cut out your own power plant and substitute the current from the city plant. But say, you, will the light company stand for this? In reply I would say that the light company is a public service corporation, and you could, I think, compel them to establish their wires in your house, though you might be, under those conditions, obliged to pay for the necessary wiring. At any rate, I do not think the company would raise that kind of an objection.

Lodi "Explains."

Lodi, Cal., who recently contributed a transferring scheme which, according to Millbrook, N. Y., did not transfer for sour apples, comes forward with the following:

> Replying to Millbrook, will explain things once more. If he will proceed as follows, he will have no trouble in transferring newspaper cuts to a slide. First, make the following solution: shave one-half bar of plain laundry soap, and boil it in six quarts of water until thoroughly dissolved. When cold add one pint of turpentine and two-thirds of a cup of borax. Stir well before using. Next thin ordinary light-colored varnish with turpentine, and coat one side of the cover glass, allowing it to remain until dry. Now dampen a clean rag with the solution and, with same clean rag, dampen the picture, blotting same afterwards with an ordinary blotter, and lay it on the varnished side of the glass, afterwards rubbing it down firmly with the back of a tablespoon. Next peel the paper off, and the slide is ready to be used. Several operators are using this solution and getting good results.
> The other day the manager of the Lyric Theater asked me what caused the bearings of a generator to become overheated. My answer was that it might be caused by lack of good, clean oil; that the supply of oil to the bearings should be of good quality, abundant in quantity, though not sufficient to overflow and get into the commutator or windings, and that the bearings should be kept perfectly clean and free from dirt; that the bearings should be cleaned out occasionally, especially if they heat; that the heating may be due to rough journals, or the bearings being too tight; the shaft being sprung; the bearings being out of line; or the belt too tight; or the armature out of center, so that the magnetic pull one way is excessive, or anything else that may cause excessive friction. He said the answer was a good one, but I would like to have your opinion.

Well, Lodi, in answering the manager I do not think you overlooked very much, yet you did omit one of the principal things, viz.: most motor bearings nowadays are lubricated either by means of a wick (capillary attraction), extending down into the oil cell, or else rings passing over the bearings and traveling therewith, extending down into the oil cell, thus carrying oil up to the bearings. The most frequent causes of heating I know of are using oil of poor quality, overload, a dirty or too short wick, the rings getting stuck, tight belt or overload. As to your transferring scheme it seems to be exactly the same as the one you sent before. So there certainly must be something wrong somewhere.

Carbon Sharpener.

W. S. Whitmore, Jewel Theater, Washington, N. J., sends a carbon sharpener for examination. While we thank brother Whitmore for submitting the tool for examination, still it is nothing more or less than the spoke sharpener, which has been described in the department time and again, and suggested as an excellent carbon sharpener. Friend Whitmore says he was troubled with a double spot on his Power's Six, but corrected the same by setting the carbons as per directions in the Handbook and placing the condensers close together, also raising the rear end of the lamp-house about ¼ of an inch. He promises a description of a take-up equalizer of his own design, concerning which he would be glad to correspond with other operators. We shall be pleased to have a description at Mr. Whitmore's convenience.

"THE STOLEN INHERITANCE" (Patheplay), December 9.—A well-photographed Western drama. The story is of a physician who deserts his wife. Later he connives at the kidnapping of an heiress in order to himself get possession of the property, but he is foiled through the interposition of his wife, who has been befriended by the man he is now trying to cheat. There is a pleasant ending.

"AN ENEMY'S AID" (Lubin), December 9.—A lurid melodrama in which the lead is played by Edgar Jones. The story is of jealousy and revenge, or rather attempted revenge—the blow-up-your-cabin kind. It will interest those who like thrillers.

"DECEPTION" (Vitagraph), December 9.—A drama that in its general plan will remind one of an old-time Biograph comedy, in which employer and valet change identities in order to fool a woman and her maid, not knowing that the latter likewise have outwardly transposed their positions. In this case the wealthy man poses as a poor artist and permits his poor relative to appear as the man of means. A stenographer determines to appear as an heiress and induces a friend to accompany her to a summer resort as a maid. The poor relative wins the supposed heiress, but when she relents and informs him of the deception, the suitor declines. The real rich man, however, comes to the front and takes the girl for himself. It is a "beautiful dream," fairly well acted, but it is hardly convincing.

"AN EQUAL CHANCE" (Selig), December 9.—A story of a man who goes into the mountains to spend a holiday with the family of a young woman in whom he is at least much interested. There he meets a maid who, in spite of the fact that she wears a short torn skirt and no stockings, apparently has just come from the hairdresser. The visitor falls in love with the maid. When he is called away on business the fiancee tells him to come to her at the end of his year's European trip—he is in California and his telegraphed order informs him that the steamer sails on the morrow—and then if both are agreed he may return to her the ring she now hands him. When the former fiancee goes to the maid she finds her an orphan, her father having died. She takes her to her home and gives her all advantages. In a year she is transformed. When the man returns he picks the maid. The story will have interest for those it succeeds in convincing.

"THE HEART OF THE LAW" (Essanay), December 9.—E. H. Calvert has the role of a policeman sent out to pick up an escaped convict. He locates him. He is a man of position. The policeman secures in his family a place as butler in order to make sure of his man. When it comes time to carry out his instructions and place the man again under arrest his courage fails. His heart has been stirred by the little girl of the household, reminding him of his own. The upshot is that he writes his resignation and leaves the home. When he gets to the hotel, where his mail is received, he finds word that the man is innocent and to tell him to report in Chicago. All ends well. It is a good story, well acted. It may not be defensible from the ethical side, but it surely is from the human, especially in view of the man's innocence.

"THE STOLEN PLANS" (Edison), December 9.- This is a real picture. It is finely staged and splendidly photographed. There is a good story. Marc MacDermott has the lead, and holds it from start to finish. This remark even applies to the aeroplane contest, in which he was a participant. There is a fine cast, and aside from a tendency on the part of William Luft, who plays the villain, to indulge in what Richard Mansfield described as "acting acting," the work of the players is excellent.

"SOPHIE'S NEW FOREMAN" (Essanay), December 13.—A ranch comedy which keeps the observer on the verge of laughter throughout and breaks into genuine mirth occasionally. Sophie hires Alkali Ike to act as her foreman; the girl arrives and affairs become considerably complicated. This is the better type of Western comedy, with good character work in several parts.

"THE INVISIBLE FOE" (Kalem), December 13.—This film story is handicapped by an unpleasant theme, the hero being addicted to use of the hypodermic needle. Both the girl and her father unite to aid him in throw in goff this terrible habit, which he succeeds in doing. The close of the story, which handles its disagreeable subject as delicately as possible, is a happy one.

"THE REAL IMPOSTOR" (Lubin), December 13.—A half reel of fairly good burlesque, in which a young artist poses as a duke in order to deceive the girl's snobbish mother. The denouement brings out some laughter from the audience.

"A PILL BOX CUPID" (Lubin), December 13.—This, on same reel with above, is quite amusing throughout and well acted. The young couple lead the fat uncle and thin aunt into taking drugs to change their weight. But the drugs get mixed up and the fatness and thinness increase. But the love affair ends happily in spite of this.

"THE FIRST CHRISTMAS" (Edison), December 13.—A film story of the birth of Christ. It begins with a feast scene in the city and shows how a young man, filled with remorse, goes out with the shepherds in the hills. The night scenes, wherein the star appears, were very appealing. A fine spiritual atmosphere is achieved by this film and it is an excellent offering for the Christmas season. The story leads up to the birth of the child in the manger, and various biblical quotations of an appropriate nature are shown A strong holiday number.

"UNCLE JOHN TO THE RESCUE" (Patheplay), December 13.—A comedy number, with Crane Wilbur, Anna Rose and Ned Burton in the cast. The scenes and characterizations are good and the story gets a pleasing start. Uncle John gives a yachting party in order to bring together the quarreling young married couple. The reconciliation should have had a little more snap to it, as it did not quite come up to the fore part of the film.

"THE HOUSE OF DISCORD" (Biograph), December 13.—The beautiful ball room scenes at the beginning of the film make a strong appeal to the observer and a story worthy of the setting soon develops. The wife and husband separate because of her plans to elope with another. Years later the daughter suffers also from her father's coldness of heart. The reconciliation was pleasingly handled. The logical development of this story and the smooth acting and photography make the film a desirable one.

"LIFE, LOVE AND LIBERTY" (Lubin), December 12.—A Mexican romance with a good sprinkling of romantic interest. Romaine Fielding appears as the governor, who is forced to order the execution of his fiancee's father. The wedding is interrupted and later the governor disguises himself and saves the father from death at the risk of his own life. The characterizations and settings are good and the story a pleasing one.

"BIRDS OF THE INLAND MARSH" (Patheplay), December 12.—Here is a half reel which will delight nature lovers everywhere. It shows tern, ibis, hell drivers, stilts and other water loving birds in their native habitats, giving close views of their nests in each case.

"A JOURNEY TO THE ENVIRONS OF NAPLES" (Patheplay), December 12.—This, on same reel with above, is equally interesting and wonderfully picturesque. The scenes are all nicely tinted. A fine reel.

"THE MYSTERIOUS WAY" (Selig), December 12.—This story, written by Arthur Preston Harkins, is an absorbing one and has a particularly effective close. The little girl runs away to follow the organ grinder and his monkey. She falls asleep in a box car. Eighteen years later the same girl plays the part of her own daughter and runs away. She finds her own grandparents. The plot has an impossible sound, but as worked out on the screen it is very convincing and has a strong heart interest. A good offering.

"GENERAL BUNKO'S VICTORY" (Kalem), December 12.—A half-reel comedy of the burlesque type, which succeeds fairly well. The hero employs the Indians to capture the haughty general and later the officer retaliates by getting the hero into the same predicament and stealing the girl.

"PIANO MANUFACTURE" (Kalem), December 12.—An exceptionally instructive half reel, shown with above, depicting the manner in which rare woods are treated in the manufacture of pianos. A good idea is obtained of the whole process of piano manufacture.

"THE LIFE SAVER" (Vitagraph), December 12.—A beach comedy, in which the girl makes a bet she will be engaged to the hero by five o'clock. He saves her life and later he in turn pretends to be drowning after they have quarreled. The situations are not new, but the cast, with Willie Van and Lillian Walker in the leads, is distinctly pleasing. The mellow photographic effects are also very attractive and on the whole the production is a good one.

"A FOUL AND FEARFUL PLOT" (Biograph), December 11.—A rough burlesque on the Wild West villain, hero and heroine. It is a grin rather than a laugh, but in one show there was some laughter.

"THE TROUBLESOME MOLE" (Biograph), December 11.—Sharing the same reel is this, also a rather rough farce. It made laughter in one show.

"AT PHNOM PENH, CAMBODIA" (Melies), December 11.—For the most part this series of Oriental views is well photographed. The subject matter is of great interest. Some temples of extraordinary beauty in line and decoration, one of them made of silver, are shown. The artistic spectator will notice a gate of metal as delicate and graceful as the veins of a leaf.

"CHILDREN OF THE FOREST" (Essanay), December 14.—We are shown a forest fire started and quickly spreading, and it certainly justifies itself as part of a picture story—the flames seem animated with an intelligently directed desire to consume the Indian heroine. It was played in a bit of woods as dry as tinder and is truly most effective. There is good material in the story, too, and the whole can be termed an artistic production. A good release.

"PHYSICAL CULTURE ON THE QUARTER CIRCLE V BAR" (Selig), December 11.—A comedy that made some hearty laughter. A conventional story; gives a chance for some new comedy stunts, many of which get over wholly. The best the picture has in this way is the work of Lester Cunio in very laughable tight-rope walking. The picture makes an excellent offering for all kinds of shows. The script is by Edwin Ray Coffin, and William Durcan produced it.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 75," December 11.—Not seen by our reviewer.

"SACRIFICE" (Vitagraph), December 11.—In a few scenes toward the end of this picture Myrtle Gonzales so artistically acts a good situation and so fills it with charming beauty that it justifies the whole. She is entertaining the man she loves, but whom she has decided to give up to her aunt (Anne Shaefer). Yet the perfection at this point rather harshly criticises the picture's earlier scenes and its story as a whole. Mary H. O'Connor is the author and Hardee Kirkwood produced it. It is a finely photographed offering and has many lovely scenes.

"GREEDY GEORGE" (Edison), December 10.—Georgie eats too much pie in the pantry at midnight and goes back to bed to dream of a pile of pies almost as high as himself. He didn't think it a nightmare till the sugar box and the bottle of ginger ale came and made him eat them. A big pudding and a big cake also figure in his dream. Andrew J. Clark is a small sized, but very pleasing, comedian, and got much fun out of it all. Lucy Oppenheim is the author, and it was produced by Charles France.

"JOINING THE OCEANS" (Edison), December 10.—On the same reel is this series of the Panama Canal. It is really a trip from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific through the Canal, and is, of course, of great interest. The photography is acceptable, that is fair.

"SMITHY'S GRANDMA PARTY" (Essanay), December 10.—A farce rather rough in places, but cleverly acted and certainly amusing. Wallace Beery is Smithy and Annie Edney is his wife, who goes on a visit to her mother, but returns unexpectedly to find that hubby is entertaining some of the girls. The butler (Bobbie Bolder) is "grandma"—a chaperone the girls demanded before they would come. It is the fun spirit of the players that counts in this picture and makes it very amusing and laughable.

"HILDA OF HERON COVE" (Selig), December 10.—An unreasonable story that can hardly interest many. There are some excellent backgrounds, but the whole is old, unconvincing and dry. Clarence Trambers is the author and E. A. Martin produced it.

"YOU'VE GOT TO PAY" (Patheplay), December 10.—Story is old style and weak. Two criminals leave prison together. One determines to live straight and the other returns to his evil ways. The "good" one becomes cashier and is engaged to the daughter of the company's president, when the other appears and he has to "pay." This is not a tragic situation nor is it very interesting, because the hero's weakness makes him almost contemptible. He is deceiving a girl who thinks him a desirable match and is in the end unwillingly made to confess.

"A PIOUS UNDERTAKING" (Edison), December 15.—A farce below Edison's standard in freshness and probability. There was laughter, due to Edward O'Connor's acting. Script by Herbert Prior and Ashley Miller produced it.

"THE UPRISING OF ANN (Vitagraph), December 15.—There is no doubt that this picture by Maria Wing tells a human story, but it starts from so distressingly sordid a situation (a country school teacher trying to break up a family and having, at first, a great advantage because the woman (wife and mother) can't read her notes to the man) that it is surprising that the ending is idealistic. We don't criticize it for this; life is full of such things. We would call it a strong offering if it had been a bit more artistic—it is impressive as it is. Anne Shaefer has the leading role and holds it up. Hardee Kirkland produced it.

"WHEN THE WELL WENT DRY" (Lubin), December 15.—A farce that is not very new, but it made two spectators laugh a good deal.

"A MASKED MIX-UP" (Lubin), December 15.—Mae Hotely, who has forbidden her husband, played by Arthur Hotaling, to go to the mask ball, finds his costume gone and follows to beat up and bring home the wrong man. "Some woman," remarked some one near us, and we think it pretty pat. Frank Griffin is the author and it was produced by Arthur Hotaling.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 76," December 15.—An especially interesting number with items from Irkoutsk, in Siberia, where there was a spectacular fire, to beautiful Hermosillo, the Mexican city, where General Carranza has made his headquarters. The general looks like a soldier and a gentleman.

"THAT SUIT AT TEN" (Vitagraph), December 10.—A picture that got 'em laughing. "That suit at ten" looked mighty good to James Lackeye, the economical business man, but it rained and, while he sits at his desk, it begins to shrink. His wife has to find carpenter tools to get him out of it, which makes a good ending, after we have seen that cheap suit doing the boa constrictor act on him until he can hardly breathe. James Young is the author and it was produced by Bert Angeles.

"PERFORMING LIONS" (Vitagraph), December 10.—On the same reel is this, which is just a bit, but worth while seeing.

Licensed Specials.

"THE CHINESE DEATH THORN" (Kalem), December 10.—There are many pictures good in two reels that would be better in one, and this present feature seems to us a sample. The story holds, because there is art in the way it is woven, not because it convinces. It has several excellent situations that convince for a time and many fine scenes, but it also has scenes that in no wise add anything effective to the whole. Made by the Kalem Company on the coast, it is well acted and the photography is clear. Its central theme is the final regeneration of a youth who had belonged to a Chinese crime syndicate and who has cut lose from his evil companions.

"A MODERN PORTIA" (Patheplay), December 11.—A two-part picture made in France with a charming young woman lawyer for its heroine. She has fallen in love with a doctor who is gambling beyond his means and who steals from one of her clients. She defends the property of this client against him and sends him to prison, though she still loves him. It makes a good serviceable release with carefully made, interesting sets, but lacks the touch of beauty that might have made it a work of art.

"HIS BEST FRIEND" (Lubin), December 11.—A melodramatic story a bit over fifteen hundred feet. The situation and development are not strong and the offering is only fair. It has some well-acted scenes, but some of it is poorly acted. One watches it for the outcome, but there is no grip or emotion in it. The author is George Terwilliger and it was produced by Barry O'Neil, who seems to have done well with this material. Harry Myers' acting shows quality.

"PEG O' THE MOVIES" (Edison), December 12.—A two-reel number, in which the plot develops somewhat too slowly and lacks a certain degree of feeling in the acting. The story, written by James Oppenheim, is an entertaining one. It gives a splendid idea of the way in which moving pictures are made and the observer follows the fortunes of Peg with much interest. The rebellious lover himself finally joins the company as the hero. Ben F. Wilson and Gertrude McCoy have the leading parts. An unusually good result was obtained in the moving picture within a picture. While this kind of a story has been worked out before in different ways, it is entertaining.

"LOVE'S SUNSET" (Vitagraph), December 13.—A tragic story, finely presented, the scenario being the product of Mrs. Owen Bronson. It tells the story of a cabaret girl who is cast off by one man and marries another without revealing the secret of her past life. Later the first man reappears and some strongly emotional scenes result. Earle Williams, Darwin Karr and Clara Kimball Young have the leads and their work is very convincing. Miss Young in particular adds to her laurels in this two-reel number. Little Bobby Connelly proved a very pleasing child actor. A strong production.

"THE WOLF OF THE CITY" (Selig), December 15.—A split feature in which the first story makes a bit more than one reel, with the rest finished up by a farce love story. In the first offering—it is not a drama—is a story of newspaper life that is not realistic nor convincing and gets nowhere—the ending is obscure and syncopated. The author is Edwin Balmer and Marshall Farnum produced it. The feature's partner called "When Father Wanted a Smoke," is a rural farce, amusingly enough produced, but with no particular freshness in its point.

Independent

"SHE SHOULD WORRY" (Joker), December 27.—Max Asher as "Schultz," who has the misfortune to own a wife extremely indifferent to his welfare, plays his usually funny role and his race after the trolley car is particularly praiseworthy work. A first-class farce comedy. No one will fail to laugh over Schultz's misadventures.

"THREE CHILDREN" (Powers), December 29.—A very pleasing release, in which a small boy wants to trade his baby brother for his grandpa, who had been sent to the Old Folks' Home. Views of an actual home are shown and the baby itself wins many friends among observers. Kathie Fisher and Edna Maison appear in the cast. One of the natural, close to human nature type of films that are always welcomed by an audience.

"THE KITCHEN MECHANIC" (Crystal), December 30.—The heroine, the kitchen maid of the title, goes on a rampage in this half-reel farce, which will be found laughable in most playhouses.

"HUBBY'S NIGHT OUT" (Crystal), December 30.—This is an amusing little sketch in which a wife waits up for a husband and finds him next morning in bed. It shares the reel with the above.

"MIKE AND JAKE IN SOCIETY" (Joker), December 31.—The dinner party at which Mike and Jakke appear in this farce comedy is a strange, but then a very funny, affair. The entire production will not fail to get its laugh.

"LURE OF THE STAGE" (Crystal), December 28.—Pearl White plays the leading part in this drama of self-sacrifice. An actress who has been having an affair with a man whom she thought a bachelor, discovers that he has a wife and child and called upon to decide between exposing him and keeping silent, she chooses the latter course.

"HIS FAITHFUL SERVANT" (Rex), December 28.—The scene of this drama is laid in Australia and the hero is a native, the faithful servant of a young settler and his family. A city man appears to chop wood for his health, insults the settler's wife and the servant saves her honor by sacrificing his life in a fight with the rascal. The final struggle is needlessly protracted, but on the whole, the story is interesting.

"APPLY TO JANITOR" (Eclair), December 28.—This rather fantastical farce relates of two henpecked husbands who manage to get away from their respective spouses to attend a prizefight. There are some good laughs in the story.

"NUTTY IS DEAD, LONG LIVE NUTTY" (Eclair), December 28.—On the same reel as the foregoing appears this burlesque concerning an individual, "Nutty," whose high life causes his uncle to cut off his allowance; whereupon Nutty plays dead. Out of this ruse springs a laughable situation.

"THE UNHAPPY PAIR" (Powers), December 26.—Edwin August plays the lead in this farce comedy which swings around the frantic efforts of a young married couple to make their home appear as they have described it to the husband's father and the bride's mother. This necessitates the stealing of a baby, a cradle and a Thanksgiving turkey. The action is spirited and the situations are laughable.

"THE FIELD FOREMAN" (Victor), December 29.—J. Warren Kerrigan, as the brutal foreman of a gang of men employed at an oil refinery, plays the leading man in this drama which has for its purpose the evolution of the foreman into a decent, lovable man. He is a thoroughgoing man and, with his companion characters, will find many friends.

"A HOPI LEGEND" (Nestor), December 31.—Wallace Reid writes and produces this story. He and Dorothy Davenport play the leads. The two make very fair-skinned and fair-complexioned Indians. The story lacks holding quality. The treatment is immature. The spirit stuff at the finish is designed to be impressive. In most cases it is to be feared the "ascension" will be provocative of ridicule.

"THE HARVEST OF SIN (Kaybee), December 26.—A spirited Western story, written by William H. Clifford. There is action aplenty in this reel and the story is acceptable throughout. The influence of the liquor sold by Jim to the Indians brings on some dramatic fighting scenes. One of the best Western releases recently shown.

"SOME NERVE" (Keystone), December 25.—This is the usual nonsensical offering, with the addition of a very pretty girl and a good character part. Ford Sterling goes through more of his highly emotional comedy and succeeds in bringing out many laughs. Pleasing nonsense.

"A TALE OF THE WEST" (Nestor), December 26.—A Western subject, beginning with a rapid-fire man hunt. The girl and her parents in the emigrant wagon shield the hero, who is believed to have killed a man. The man's recovery was so absolute as to be almost ridiculous, but for all its absurdity the brisk action of the piece and its thrilling moments hold the attention well. Donald McDonald and Ramona Langley are pleasing as the young couple.

"SLIM AND THE OUTLAW" (Frontier), December 25.—In this number Slim sets out to capture Rattlesnake Pete and thus win the hand of the girl. Instead he arrests the bridegroom. Some quite amusing scenes in this, the one in the barber shop being the best.

"FRED GOES IN FOR HORSES" (Apollo), December 7.—This burlesque comedy number starts in quite slowly, but a number of amusing situations develop. It concerns the theft of Fred's horses by Hank and Lank, and the subsequent search for them. A fairly entertaining offering.

"THE RIVAL PITCHERS" (Majestic), December 14.—This is a pleasing low comedy number, with some character work that is better than common. A grocer and a cobbler are rivals for the hand of a woman shopper. The closing scenes are of a hilarious nature and occur at a baseball game. Some of them bring out a good deal of laughter.

"HIS IMAGINARY FAMILY" (Princess), December 12.—This is an amplification of an old theme in which the nephew borrows a wife and child in order to deceive his uncle. Muriel Ostriche and Boyd Marshall appear. The story is a pretty one, in spite of its absurdity. The fireside scene was attractive and of course a genuine love affair results from the deception. A pleasing number.

"THE GREAT PORTOLA FESTIVAL IN SAN FRANCISCO" (Apollo), December 14.—This pictures numerous parade scenes from the Portola celebration in the Golden Gate city some time back. The subject matter is old.

"SEMI-ANNUAL DRILL OF LOS ANGELES POLICE" (Apollo), December 14. Showing the police of the Angel City on parade, with views of Mayor Alexander and Chief Sebastian. A fair number, on same reel with above.

"A MAN'S A MAN" (Reliance), December 13.—This depicts an idea that has been used before, illustrating the manner in which some surveyors were restrained from digging up a grave on their right of way. Bud's cleanup of the surveying gang was briskly shown. The photography is good and the story a fairly strong one.

"THE MIGHTY ATOM" (Reliance), December 15.—The atom in this case is a very young and enjoyable baby, left in the room of a bachelor. The story is interesting, inasmuch as the bachelor and the old maid decide to marry and look after the infant. Mabel Wright and Paul Scardon play the leads. A good human touch in this.

"THE CHAMPION" (Keystone), December 25.—A first rate horse racing number, in which Mabel Normand plays the part of the driver after her lover has been bound and hidden away by the villain and his tools. The police force is called out and the film runs along in the usual burlesque style for which this company is noted. In this instance both the story and the settings are exceptionally interesting.

"HE WOULD A-HUNTING GO" (Keystone), December 29.—In this the Fat Boy appears as a count. The scenes occur in the vicinity of a hunting lodge. He is pursued by a fake bear and the situations become very amusing. There is also quite an element of suspense in this burlesque number. A pleasing offering.

"THE GOD OF TOMORROW" (Majestic), December 16.—This is a somewhat mystical offering, in which a grateful Chinaman gives the hero a small statue, known as The God of Tomorrow. Joe in turn gives it to his sweetheart, and later in the story the idol induces her to return to her lover. The letter inserts were shown too briefly. Some of the girl's visions were a little confusing, but as a whole the story is a pleasing one.

"LAWYER, DOG AND BABY" (Thanhouser), December 14.—The lawyer dislikes children, but has a hard time keeping away from them. In fact, a baby is given to him and he cannot get rid of it. There is an amusing idea in this, but the film as a whole seemed to carry no particular point and does not present a very well rounded story.

"PEGGY'S INVITATION" (Thanhouser), December 16.—Marguerite Snow, a favorite screen artist, appears in this number after several weeks' vacation. She plays the part of Peggy, who attends a masquerade ball on an invitation she found in the street. The story is not very strongly handled in places, but contains an entertaining idea and holds the interest in spite of this.

"A MAN'S AWAKENING" (Majestic), December 20.—Bill is a rough character, whose one friend is a dying consumptive. He is in jail when the latter dies, but the girl, daughter of the sheriff, releases him from the cell to bury his friend. There is a big idea in this story, though the death scenes should have been made less conspicuous. The photography and acting are good and the action of the piece is commendable. Bill falls in love with the girl after his awakening comes.

Independent Specials

"DEMONITE" (Film Releases of America).—A two-part feature offering that we can commend. There is no part of it that is not both clear and interesting; it is beautifully staged and has some lovely photographs. The players are in themselves pleasing and act convincingly. The climax, at which a little of the Demonite, a new explosive, goes up on a train and shatters it into splinters is perfectly suggested—the producer had some tremendous wreck to work with and used it well. The plot is simple and effective.

"MADAME SATAN" (Film Releases of America).—A three-part melodrama with a very beautiful, but very wicked, villainess. A rich oil king falls in love with the mysterious princess, who is to prove to be Madame Satan. The man's daughter has, from the first, an instinctive dislike for the other woman, and the plot (rather loosely woven) takes up the struggle between the two on the basis, as it were, of angel and fiend. The first two reels are dramatic, if a bit slow, but the settings, scenes and acting show quality. The last reel is but loosely connected with the former parts; is very melodramatic, a la American Wild-West, and closes with a miniature landscape—set with buildings, trees, mountains and a river, and this is the scene of a terrible conflagration. It is a picture that will please a good many.

"THE BUCCANEERS" (Gold Seal), December 30.—In this well-staged three-real production we are introduced to Blackbeard, the celebrated pirate, La Fette, his companion in crime and their respective crews of buccaneers. Some interesting scenes aboard the pirate ship occur and the color throughout is good. The story swings around Blackbeard's and La Fette's impersonation of some guests of the governor of Trinidad, is clearly presented and holds the interest.

"BLOODHOUNDS OF THE NORTH" (Gold Seal), December 23.—This two-reel drama gives a good account of the Canadian mounted police, the romantic and adventurous constabulary of the Northwest woods. It appears in the beginning that an embezzler, an old man from some city, is taking refuge with outlaws in a mountain retreat. He brings his daughter with him. The police track the fugitive and in the effort to arrest him, full of fighting and shooting, he is killed and the daughter marries one of the police. Some splendid woods and mountain settings occur.

"EILEEN OF ERIN" (Domino), December 25.—A two-reel Irish story, written by Richard V. Spencer. The action is very good, and while the situations resemble those of previous offerings along this line, the production is decidedly attractive. The characterizations and general atmosphere of the piece are excellent. The fighting scenes between the Irish laddis and the red coats were well staged. The escape of Dennis and his swim out to the vessel bring the story up to an exciting close. A good offering of the type.

"TRUE IRISH HEARTS" (Domino), December 25.—This three-reel drama drops readily into the category of Irish plays and pictures from time immemorial. But it is enacted with dash and spirit; the costuming and settings are what they should be, and altogether there is no drag in the development of the picture. Most effective of all are the closing scenes, wherein the young priest passes himself off for Danny in order that the latter may escape to America with his wife. For this the priest sacrifices his life, and the escaping couple never know of this. First-class Irish drama of the conventional type.

"JACK AND THE BEANSTALK" (Thanhouser), December 19.—A reel and a half number, depicting the good old tale of the youthful prodigy who mounts the beanstalk and invades the realms of the giant. In this the Thanhouser Kid appears as Jack and makes a very creditable appearance in all of the various scenes. The production is not particularly spectacular, but it adheres to the fairy story very closely and will delight childish observers as well as older people.

"THE BUSHLEAGUER'S DREAM" (Thanhouser), December 19.—This finishes out the above two reels. William Russell dreams he is a National League performer. It is a fairly amusing little skit.

GASTON BELL JOINS LUBIN.

A new and important leading man, Gaston Bell, has joined the Lubin home studio and bids fair to be noticed. Mr. Bell has acted with the Majestic and Kinemacolor Film Companies and is fairly known upon the screen. On the legitimate stage he played important roles in "Brewster's Millions," "The Seven Sisters" and several of Charles Frohman's productions. He is now assigned to the leading roles of several photoplays adapted from the Charles Klein's plays which are now being filmed by the Lubin Company.

GARDEN THEATRE, NEW YORK.

Beautiful Example of the New Type of Picture Theaters Being Erected in the Metropolis.

AMONG the several examples of the new style of motion picture theater architecture that has made its appearance in New York City during the past six months, the Garden Theater, at 2755 Webster Avenue, stands out with due prominence. Constructed under section 109 of the New York code, which governs the building of legitimate dramatic theaters, it possesses all the peculiarities of such a structure as to exits and other devices for the safety and comfort of its patrons and is fireproof throughout. The building is 126 feet deep and has an average width of 46 feet and seats 625 persons, the chairs being of a very high grade from the American Seating Company.

The color scheme of the interior decoration is gray and gold. Large panels in light gray are bordered with an ornamental plaster moulding in gold and in the center of each panel is a Grecian figure in dark gray; the effect produced is pleasing and artistic. All exit and side lights are enclosed with red glass shades supplemented by indirect light chandeliers and a large cluster hanging from the ceiling.

In the lobby floor red quarry tile has been used and the sides are done in marble. The doors are mahogany finish. Poster frames do not clutter or obstruct the entrance, all advertising matter being set in brass frames fastened to the walls.

The projection equipment consists of two Standard machines with a Hallberg economizer for current control, projecting a picture 13 feet 6 inches by 18 feet at a distance of 101 feet. An excellent picture is obtained. Music for the pictures is provided by a Sohmer grand piano at which a very efficient young lady presides.

The Garden was built about the first of the present year at a cost of $80,000 and opened May 17, by the F. & G. Amusement Company, of which Maurice L. Fleischman is president and manager. The admission price is 10 and 15 cents every night and no "country stores" or other premium plans have been resorted to to draw patronage which has been excellent since the house was opened. The pictures shown are from the General Film Company.

Manager Fleischman is a young man of the progressive type and believes in giving his patrons the best that can be obtained. He keeps his house in the very best order and has secured a dependable patronage among a class of people that would not visit a place that was not properly conducted.

NEW GRAND THEATER, NEW ALBANY, IND.

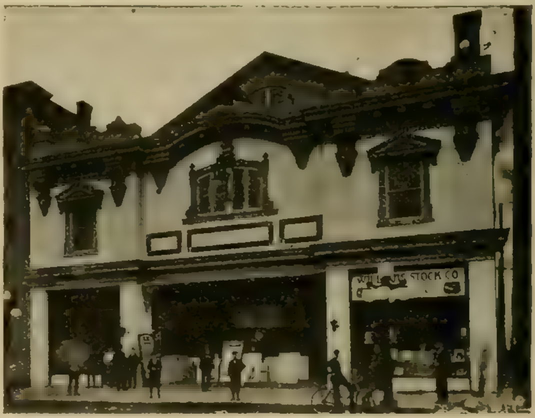
The New Grand Theater, New Albany, Ind., which is one of the largest and finest in Southern Indiana, is the property of the Falls City Amusement Company, of Louisville, of which M. Switow, of the Switow Amusement Company, is president and general manager. The same company controls two other houses, the Dream, in Jeffersonville, Ind., and the Crystal, in Louisville, Ky., directly across the river from the two Indiana cities.

The dignified and handsome design of the theater, which differs to a marked degree from the over-ornate fronts of many houses, is to be credited not only to the company's good taste, but to the judgment of the architects, Joseph & Joseph, of Louisville, Ky., who designed the building. The front is of white enameled brick, with a simple design over the entrance in the same material, of green, and window frames and cornices of heavy galvanized iron, painted stone-color.



New Grand Theater, New Albany.

The building is of fireproof construction throughout. Brick, steel and concrete were the materials used, including an all-steel operators' room. The interior, of course, is plastered, moldings of that material, as well as other decorative effects, being picked out in gold, against the general color scheme of rose in which the interior is finished.

The site being 60 feet front by 120 feet deep, the building is one of unusual size and roominess, affording ample seating capacity without crowding. The ground floor contains 700 seats comfortably, while the balcony holds 300 more, giving a total seating capacity of 1,000, which is in excess of that of any other picture theater in the city, and more than a great majority of the houses in the Kentucky metropolis across the river. The Bennett Seating Company, of Cincinnati, O., furnished the seats.

Work was begun on the house early in May, 1913, and was pushed as rapidly as possible, in the hope of having it completed in ample time for the opening of the current season. Various causes operated to bring about delays, however, and the opening in the latter part of November was as early as it was found possible to make it. Every possible modern feature for the comfort and convenience of patrons has been included, washed-air ventilation and a fan system insuring the wholesomeness of the atmosphere in a literal sense, while a modern heating plant will provide heat during cold weather. Two store rooms are located in the front of the building, one on each side of the entrance. There are eight exits.

The use of large vaudeville acts is rendered possible by the fact that the house has a good-sized stage, 60 by 25 feet; and it has also been proven possible to give very creditable performances of an even more extensive nature, a musical comedy stock company of twelve members featuring the program for a time. Two or three vaudeville turns are nearly always employed in connection with the regular four-reel program of moving pictures; and all this is given for the usual admission charge of ten cents for adults and five cents for children. Four reels are also given regularly with the performances of the stock company, at the same price.

The Mutual program is used by the New Grand, in connection with occasional features, and the other attractions referred to. There is a daily change of the motion picture program, and four times a week the remainder of the program is changed.

The house was opened under the management of W. J. Bradford, who has since gone to Martinsville, Ind., to open a theater of the Switow Amusement Company's string, and has been succeeded by Edward Wentzell, of Louisville. It is the intention of the management to continue its extremely liberal policy in the matter of large and varied programs, and to deserve the continued large patronage of New Albany audiences, who have shown their appreciation of the big dime's worth offered by filling the house regularly.

Under these circumstances, the $35,000 investment of the company in the new house and its equipment bids fair to be a profitable one, despite the rather heavy expense of operating the theater. A four-piece orchestra and the other necessary employes of the house, who number thirteen in all, make a rather heavy pay-roll; but it all goes to make up the good service which has already distinguished the theater, and there is no question of cutting it down.

CAPACITY BUSINESS AT PLAY HOUSE.

Ever since the Play House, Ridgewood, N. J., opened on November 22, the management has been playing to capacity business. The structure, which is of concrete construction, measures 52 feet by 154 feet, and has 800 seats on the parquet floor and 200 in the balcony. The seats were bought of the Andrews Seating Company, and the stage scenery and curtain were furnished by the Lee Lash Studios. The interior decorative scheme is ivory, gold and brown ornamental plaster. In the operating room there are two Simplex machines and a Hallberg economizer; the projection machines are fitted with Gundlach-Manhattan lenses. The length of the throw is 127 feet. The indirect lighting system is used throughout the house. The ventilation system can supply thirty cubic feet of air per minute. The screen is located at the back of the stage and is framed in black. The admission prices are 10 and 15 cents, except when specials are run when the price is raised to 15 and 20 cents. The General Film Service is used with features from the Famous Players Company. A piano is the only musical instrument in the house. The lobby is of tile and marble. William W. Young is the resident manager. The theater is owned by the Ridgewood Play House Company, of which Walter W. Wilsey is president; Thomas Nicholas, of Nutley, vice-president, and A. N. Van Liew, of Newark, Secretary and treasurer. The board of directors consists of Howard Peck, of South Orange, and Albert W. Fish, Bloomfield.

LARGEST THEATER OPENED.

On the 14th of November, last, the Allen, the largest moving picture house in Calgary, Can., was opened. The house boasts of a very big pipe organ. The programs promised appear to be good ones, its first headliner being "Protea," one of the World Special Films Corporation's films. His Worship Mayor H. A. Sinnott delivered the opening address.

MAJESTIC THEATER COMPANY OPENS HOUSE.

The Majestic Theater Company, of Moose Lake, Minn., has opened a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 200 in that town. The theater is located directly across from the depot on the main street. Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday matinees are the only dates on which the house plays to moving pictures, the rest of the time it is open to road shows. The dimensions of the structure are 26 feet by 60 feet.

TO OPEN PICTURE HOUSE.

F. M. Kendall, Natseka, Ill., has rented the Fred Gard building in Third Street, this city, and will open a first class moving picture theater. Mr. Kendall expects to have the house open by January 1, 1914. It will be named the Princess. A mirroroide screen will be installed, and a five cent show will be given.

DAVIS AND KIRKLAND TO BUILD NEW HOUSE.

Rodney C. Davis, proprietor of the Kozy theater, Paducah, Ky., and Rankin Kirkland, assistant cashier of the City National Bank of that city, announce that early next year they will give the people of Paducah the "last word" in motion picture theaters. It is the intention of Mr. Davis to raze his Kozy theater at 417 Broadway, the dimensions of which are 20 feet by 90 feet, and to erect upon the site a new house, the measurements of which will be, according to the plans, 26 feet by 150 feet. The proposed structure will have a seating capacity of 500 as compared with that of 240 of the Kozy. One of the many features of the new house will be a big pipe organ.

MAJESTIC RENOVATED.

L. W. Guiteau, manager of the Majestic Theater, Freeport, Ill., has spent a large amount of money upon improvements to his house. The seating capacity has been increased to over 500, a new and bigger screen has been installed, upon which a picture 12 by 16 feet will be projected. A number of other improvements were made including new seats and wiring.

NEW THEATER IN CEDAR RAPIDS.

The Isis is a new motion picture house opened in Cedar Rapids, Ia., by Messrs. Clement and Sutherland. It is a strictly fireproof house and, according to information received, is one of the best in the city. The indirect lighting system is used, and the house is under the management of W. L. Meyers. Continual shows are given from 11 in the morning until 11 in the night.

$150,000 THEATER IN SALT LAKE CITY.

There has been opened recently in Salt Lake City, Utah, a $150,000 moving picture theater, which has a seating capacity of 3000. The structure is absolutely fireproof, being built of reinforced concrete, and its furnishings and appointments are up-to-date in every respect. A pipe organ costing $30,000 has been built into the structure.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell

IN the Chicago letter last week Brother McQuade stated that Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of Chicago schools, since deposed, is championing an ordinance requiring five-minute intermissions between the showing of reels, presumably meaning thousand-foot lengths. The letter states that Mrs. Young's recommendation urges the legislation "in the interest of the sight of the large number of school children visiting motion picture exhibitions," and asks that the measure be drafted along the lines of the Massachusetts state law. Mrs. Young might be in much better business. If, however, she is determined to do something to preserve and protect the eyesight of the children of Chicago she may find far better channels into which to deflect her surplus energy than by championing intermissions between reels. Let her agitate the appointment of inspectors endowed with authority for the confiscation and destruction of wornout films. If she will do this she will be in a way to accomplish something that will be not only for the benefit of children, but for grown-ups as well. Unquestionably there is a period in the life of a film that marks the crossing of the eye-safety line. Beyond that point it should not be permitted to go. In time to come this is one phase of the exhibition of motion pictures that is bound to receive serious consideration; and then it will be followed by positive action. It is not a matter of morals. It is a matter of public health. As such it easily will come within the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Health and without that of the Department of Police. The eye-strain that comes from well-projected pictures in good condition is negligible. This is not an idle statement. That it is a fact can be verified by thousands of persons who every day see thousands of feet of film thrown upon the screen.

Let us concede the five-minute intermissions. In a five-reel show the attention of the children for twenty minutes will not be concentrated on the screen. During that third of an hour they will not be idle; neither will they be quiet. It is against child nature. Much serious thought has been given in the past to safeguarding the welfare of the younger ones who attend picture shows. That welfare will not be promoted, it will be distinctly threatened, by the creation of opportunities for mischief, even of the milder forms. Mrs. Young raises a moral issue; and it will be the opinion of many experienced picture men, exhibitors particularly, that she is allied on the side of unwisdom at least. Exhibitors, however, should fight any such proposition, if it ever reaches the legislative stage, on the broad ground of common sense. Statistics show in large centers an average of one child to four adults in attendance at picture shows. Grown people go to theaters to be entertained, not to be bored. They want to see the program and get out. If to the showing of a thousand feet of film an exhibitor allows fifteen minutes he will put on four pictures an hour. An intermission of five minutes means that he will project but three an hour. In other words, the program is curtailed by 25 per cent. In many cases his receipts would dwindle in the same proportion. It is not difficult to conceive of many instances where the head of the family, when importuned at the conclusion of the evening meal to go to "the pictures," recalls that five-minute bogey, with the result that his pipe, his book and his fireside have for him far more charm than a long walk in the chill night air and an exasperating wait between reels. Give picturegoers, children as well as adults, steady, continuous projection of films in good condition, and there need be no fear of eye-strain. Better than that, the interests of the children will be more surely conserved than could possibly be the case with five-minute intermissions.

Albert Blinkhorn has received a letter from W. A. Denny, principal of the Anderson (Ind.) High School, enthusiastically praising the Hepworth seven-reel production of "David Copperfield." Mr. Denny showed the picture to 3150 persons, a number of whom returned for the second showing. "I will say personally that I have never been better pleased, nor have I ever seen a better film than 'David Copperfield,'" wrote Mr. Denny.

"Bill Kalem" Wright attended the exhibitors' ball. When the firemen closed the gates just before 10 o'clock, Bill Kalem was hard by the entrance. Nothing but a box ticket would pass the fireman on guard. A friend in need is a friend indeed. For the momentary loan of the magic pasteboard to secure the admission of a barred-out friend, thanks are herewith extended to Bill Kalem. It's a safe bet that no Kalemite appeared in vain at the entrance to the hall.

Irving Cummings, now with the Universal, will be seen under the Imp brand.

One of the prettiest incidents of the ball was the descent upon John Hardin, formerly assistant general manager of the Edison studio and now with the Ambrosio, by many of the younger members of the Edison company, the girls predominating. The group had been conducting a search for the man who for nine years was with the Edison forces, and it just happened they discovered him in the barroom. It may be said in extenuation, should any be necessary, that this seemed to be the best spot for locating old friends, and, of course, that's why J. H. was there. It was the work of a moment for the party to separate their quarry from his surrounding male friends and escort him to a far corner, where he was properly upbraided for deserting them.

Here is an interesting picture. There will be no hesitancy in recognizing Gene Gauntier, long-time photoplayer and script writer. She is one of the few women who in such high degree combines this rare faculty. If she had not to her credit hundreds of good pictures, if she never wrote or played in another, her fame as the writer of the script for "From the Manger to the Cross" would be sufficient to keep her in the minds of picture makers and picture followers for many years to come. Nor did her connection with this wonderful production end with the writing of it. She portrayed the Virgin Mary. Her interpretation was notable for its feeling, its sympathy, its reverence. It was the work of a skilled artist who realized the importance of the role that had been assigned to her and put into it all her native ability and all the knowledge and technique she had acquired in her long experience.

Gene Gauntier and Patsy O'Sullivan.

Come now to the second chapter. It deals with Patsy O'Sullivan. Patsy is an Irish terrier—as Irish as a terrier born on the shores of a Killarney lake can be and as much of a terrier as a real blue blooded Irishman is ordinarily credited with being. Patsy was presented to Miss Gauntier on her fourth picture-making trip to the Emerald Isle the past summer. He is red and possesses a temper to correspond. He keeps his mistress busy by reason of his aggressiveness, in which discretion enters not. Big dogs look to him just the same as small ones.

Upon her return from Ireland, in October, Miss Gauntier entertained her mother, Mrs. James Wesley Liggett, of Kansas City, Mo. Mrs. Liggett was on her way to Mainz, Germany, to attend the premier performance of Leoncavallo's opera, "Zingari," in which Miss Gauntier's sister, Marguerite Gauntier, had been selected to sing the stellar role, under the direction of the composer. Miss Gauntier is the prima donna of the Stadttheatre, in Mainz, and, although but twenty-two years old, has been remarkably successful. She is under "command" to sing before the King and Queen of Sweden in seven operas during the Christmas holidays. Miss Gauntier inherits the family talent for acting, a factor, it will be agreed, of great importance in the equipment of a prima donna.

At Nathan Machat's Nostrand Theater, in Brooklyn, on Monday night, the Rev. Madison C. Peters spoke on the Vitagraph two-part subject "Daniel." Mr. Machat showed this picture several weeks ago. At that time, Hudson Maxim, the inventor, one of the regular patrons of the house, saw the production and told Mr. Machat if he would make an effort to get the picture again he would undertake to promise that Mr. Peters, who wrote the script, would be present and address his audience. Mr. Machat readily agreed. Mr. Peters, in his address, caused some amusement by stating that when he first went to the Vitagraph studio at the time the picture was being made, there seemed to be a dearth of knowledge in regard to the Bible. "Do you know," he said, "that before we were through they were all reading the Good Book?" The clergyman stated, in the course of his ten minutes' talk, that, through the influence of the motion picture, the Bible would in the future be seen as well as read.

"The Vicar of Wakefield"

Albert Blinkhorn Shows Interesting Three-Part Adaptation of Goldsmith's Famous Novel.

By George Blaisdell.

THOSE who have read "The Vicar of Wakefield" are not to be blamed for wondering how a fairly faithful screen interpretation of the eighteenth century story can possibly serve as entertainment. There is in this tale of the minister who was also farmer and philosopher-controversialist so much of sorrow and misfortune and humiliation that none but a brave man would attempt to transfer the classic to the screen. It must be admitted that the producer has succeeded and beyond question in giving us a charming picture. Naturally there are many incidents in the book for which there is not room in a three-part picture. For instance, there is no appearance of the older son, who is made to wander over Europe, the story of which must have been in large measure a recounting of the personal experiences of the author; who comes home and enters the army, only to return for the purpose of avenging the stain put upon the family honor by the libertinous Thornhill, and, after his failure, is landed bleeding and chained in the cell with the Vicar. The fine romance of George and Miss Wilmot also is among the missing. The loss of the Vicar's fortune and its ultimate restoration is untouched. We see practically nothing of the destitution into which the Vicar's family was plunged; and the elimination of this phase of the life of the worthy old man makes for the better entertainment.

Scene from "The Vicar of Wakefield" (Hepworth).

What will first strike the observer in "The Vicar of Wakefield" are the backgrounds. You step into the atmosphere in the first scene. So marked is it that you instinctively feel the picture could have been made nowhere but in England. Much attention has been given to the costumes, a matter of much importance in a story written a hundred and fifty years ago. The same care has been bestowed on the interiors. The acting is good. Warwick Buckland is the Vicar. It is a difficult role, one requiring good judgment to avoid the pitfalls in the portrayal of a man who subordinated the natural instincts of a man and a father to the dictates of a highly developed conscience, a supersensitive one, a layman would say. One of the best interpretations is that of Mrs. Mary De Solla as the wife of the Vicar. She shows us the ambitious mother, always studying how to make the best appearance, how to marry her daughters to their advantage and to the family honor, and to the end refusing to concede that reversal in financial status had altered the social position of her family. Jack Raymond plays Richard Thornhill. His delineation of the young rake shows us a man who hardly conceals his true character; he is inclined to be overbold and to lack the finesse, the suavity, the polish, that make so deep a first impression on the feminine heart. The two women friends of Richard, the two whom he employs to decoy Olivia and Sophia to London, are convincing. Their deportment is such as to deceive those more worldlywise than the Vicar and his family. Harry Buss is Mr. Jenkinson, the rascal who on an important occasion played his unscrupulous employer false and secured for a marriage ceremony a real clergyman instead of a bogus one. The picture is well photographed.

WILLIAM N. BAILEY.

William N. Bailey.

A personality that one never forgets is radiated by William N. Bailey, one of the most valued members of Essanay's Eastern stock company, now located at the home studio in Chicago. There is a strength in the work of this splendid actor that never fails to register on the screen. As a portrayer of manly roles he has only to be himself to give a convincing rendition of American manhood in its ideal form. A titian blond, tall and muscular, he carries with him a refinement and grace of movement that wins people to him on sight. Even as a cowpuncher among rough men he stands out as the dominating figure, clean of mind and body, with a mind and will of his own; a true type of a man who cannot be bluffed.

In modern society dramas and comedies Mr. Bailey fits with ease and polish. Having been raised as a gentleman such parts come natural to him and he does them with urbanity and grace. He is equally good at character work by virtue of his long experience as a stage player.

There are not many men, comparatively, who have been raised in a social atmosphere who have gone through such a strenuous apprenticeship as Bill Bailey. At his fourteenth year he was working in a Milwaukee bank, of which his uncle was vice-president. As a side line he got a job as stage clearer with the old Thanhouser Stock Company. When his uncle heard of it he gave his nephew his choice between a banker's life and a stage career. Bailey chose the stage. Having saved $12, he bought a six dollar trunk and used the remainder to go to Chicago, where after one day's idleness he signed as leading man with a road show known as The Thoroughbred Tramp. Bill was big for his age and had plenty of nerve, but being shy on experience he was "canned" very quickly as leading man. They offered him a job on "props" for $12 which he took philosophically and went along, having the song book privilege and the additional perquisite of gathering up the lithographs before the show left town. He was an easy boss and the boys who sold the books stole most of the money from him. Later in the season the company found it necessary to dispense with its high-salaried stars and Bailey was offered a combination position of leads and master of transportation, with the understanding that he should still continue to work on "props."

In this way he became a leading man and continued for a good number of years, later appearing with Adelaide Thurston, Shuberts' production of "Girls," Macklyn Arbuckle, the Worcester Stock Company, Worcester, Mass., and for long seasons in vaudeville. The engagements specifically mentioned covering a period of seven years. In 1911 he took to picture work, appearing in Edison and Pathe productions. In April, 1912, he joined the Essanay Company, where he still remains.

ROTHAPFEL USES A MIRROROIDE SCREEN.

On page 1401 of our issue of December 20, there appeared a descriptive article of the Regent Theater, New York, in which the screen in use was credited to the wrong manufacturer. The Mirroroide screen, of which the J. H. Genter Company, Inc., Newburgh, N. Y., is the manufacturer, is the projecting surface used by Mr. Rothapfel at the Regent Theater. In fact, he has used it for some time past in other theaters before coming to the Regent.

While we are on the subject of Mirroroide screens, it may be mentioned that one of these surfaces has just been installed in the big Olympic Theater, at 107th Street and Broadway, New York, where it is giving much satisfaction, not only as a projecting surface, but for the reason that more light may be used in the auditorium and a still clearer picture obtained than before. Incidentally, that was a Mirroroide upon which the pictures were shown at the New York Exhibitors' ball, Terrace Garden, last Monday night.

USEFUL CHRISTMAS SOUVENIR.

One of the most serviceable of the many ideas we have seen at this time is the thermometer with calendar attached that is being sent to their friends by the Picture Theater Equipment Company of New York. Either in the theater or operating room, the thermometer will be a handy and even necessary little device.

Wisconsin Reorganized.

Enthusiastic Convention Held at Oshkosh—New Branch Has Membership of Seventy-two.

Oshkosh, Dec 17, 1913.

THE opening session of the convention for reorganization of the Wisconsin Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in the green room of the Athearn Hotel, Tuesday, December 16th, at two o'clock in the afternoon with National President Neff presiding. President Neff was introduced by John R. Ek, chairman of the local committee on arrangements, and began his address with the announcement that the object of the convention was to reorganize Wisconsin exhibitors into a concrete working body. He showed that sixty-three members had joined the league within the preceding three weeks.

Nine more members signed while the convention was in session, making a grand total of seventy-two in the Wisconsin organization. These figures speak eloquently when compared with the thirty-two members on which a per capita tax was paid for representation at the late national convention in New York.

The proceedings were marked by a warmth and cordiality among the members that bespeak great things for this reorganized state branch, and President Neff's opening address created a strong impression by reason of its conciliatory tone towards members of the old organization who had followed the bolters, and for its able treatment of present conditions as they affect the industry. Committees on membership, constitution and by-laws, press, grievance and legislation were then appointed by the chair, with instructions, that they should report Wednesday, at ten o'clock.

The following officers were elected shortly after convening Wednesday morning:

National Vice-President, John R. Ek, of Oshkosh.
State President, Harry Burford, of LaCrosse.
State Vice-President, W. C. Judson, of Portage.
Second State Vice-President, H. C. Zander, of Rhinelander.
Secretary, A. H. Gray, of Oshkosh.
Treasurer, Neil Duffy, of Appleton.
Sergeant-at-Arms, C. L. Hiller, of Eau Claire.

The committee on constitution and by-laws, in its report, recommended that the Ohio constitution and by-laws be adopted, the only change made being to collect dues semi-annually instead of quarterly. The other committees reported that they had nothing to suggest at the time. Adjournment was afterwards taken until two o'clock.

Shortly after the hour of convening an open session was held to give the representatives of feature film manufacturers attending the convention an opportunity to say a word on censorship. A. G. Kosch, representing the Pilot; Mr. Solomon, of Warner's Features, and B. Barnett, of the Famous Players, held the floor successively. Mr. Barnett especially referred to the elevation of pictures by his company, and with the two other speakers, charged that exhibitors were responsible for the class of films shown on the screen. If they desired they could eliminate all necessity for censorship by demanding films that would appeal to the best in human nature, Mr. Barnett held.

During the closed session immediately following, Mr. Duffy, of LaCrosse, moved that the members present approve of the action of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America at the national convention in New York, which was carried. After votes were taken for several cities to decide the meeting place for the next state convention, Green Bay was chosen. The convention will be held April 7th and 8th, 1914.

A banquet was given in the Athearn Hotel Wednesday evening at which over forty guests, including the mayor of the city, were entertained.

OREGON EXHIBITORS HOLD CONVENTION.

Exhibitors of the state of Oregon held a convention for the purpose of forming a branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at Portland on December 22 and 23. Officers were elected and a banquet was given at the Oregon Hotel.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS MEET.

A meeting of the Michigan Exhibitors' League was held at Bay City, December 9. It was the semi-annual convention and about 100 members were present. The sessions of the convention were held at the Wenonah Hotel. A banquet Wednesday evening closed the event.

SALISBURY & SORIERO LEASE THEATER.

The Auditorium Theater, Fitchburg, Mass., has been leased by H. F. Salisbury and Thomas D. Soriero, who will conduct the house as a place for the presentation of moving pictures as well as for repertoire and vaudeville companies.

SECRETARY WILEY EXTOLLS ORGANIZATION.

Says That the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Has Eliminated the Necessity of Censorship for Pictures.

In an interview published in the Republican of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, George H. Wiley, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, stated that the organization of exhibitors throughout the country has made it possible for exhibitors to induce manufacturers to produce the highest class of pictures and has educated the people who attend picture theaters to demand a better program.

"Had it not been for the organization," said Secretary Wiley, "the managers might not have seen the necessity of raising the standard of their entertainment. It has been a rule that has worked both ways. The managers want the high class shows; the people are demanding them and the manufacturers are being forced to make this sort of film.

"The conditions of the theaters has been improved also. There are few theaters today, where the best sanitary conditions are not found. The safety of the patrons has been taken into consideration, and in this youngest of business, more progressive spirit is shown than in almost any other line.

"Through the efforts of organization, there is little or no demand now for the blood and thunder variety of films. Jesse James pictures are on the decline, and pictures of an educational value are superseding them. The managers of theaters are taking the stand that mothers and children are the best censors of pictures. They see no need of a local or state board of censors, for patrons who know that a theater shows good pictures will patronize that show. If they find that a film is the least bit risque, the theater gets a bad name, and the manager feels the results in his receipts.

"A board of censors in a city naturally leads to politics and possibly graft. The managers are keeping out of politics, and are doing so by raising the standard of their shows. In all of my experience," concluded Mr. Wiley, "I have not found a single instance where a local or state board of censors has proved satisfactory."

KATE DAVIS IN TROUBLE.

Well Known Agitator of Motion Picture Censorship Charged with Writing "Poisoned Pen" Letters.

Upon the allegation that she is the author of a series of anonymous letters attacking another social worker, Mrs. Clarence J. Wallace, Miss Kate Davis, who has gained some notoriety as an advocate of censorship for motion pictures, is now under $1,000 bail to answer to a charge of criminal libel at her home in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. In addition to the criminal charge, it is said that a civil suit for slander will be pressed against Miss Davis by Mrs. Wallace and her husband, who is a prominent physician in Wilkes-Barre

Miss Davis announced, in an interview published in the New York World, that the charge against her was the culmination of a political plot framed up by the Republican politicians of Pennsylvania to put a stop to her activities in trying to rid that state of "crime creating" moving pictures. She denies writing the letters of which she is alleged to be the author.

Miss Davis claims to be the superintendent of the National Legal Regulation League, the object of which is to better the motion picture condition throughout the country. She was a prominent candidate for membership of the state board of censors of Pennsylvania, but the law has never been put in operation.

PICTURES IN DES MOINES HIGH SCHOOL.

Now that the citizens of Des Moines, Iowa, have voted in favor of establishing social centres in the city school houses, motion pictures are to be introduced as a regular part of the course of study, and on one night of each week a regular picture program will be given, but without objectionable features and illustrated songs. Special attention will be given to pictures of weekly news events and cartoons. The high school students have purchased a complete motion picture outfit with the proceeds of a play they staged. The admission fee for the picture shows will be 5 cents to start with, but later it is expected that two, and even three, tickets will be sold for this price. All proceeds will go to rent the films.

In class work, the motion pictures will be used in commercial geography, to depict industrial conditions, and in the domestic science department, to explain food analysis and the preparation of food products.

SIMPLEX IN STATE INSTITUTIONS.

The State Board of Control of the State of Arizona has purchased, through the California Film Exchange, of Phoenix, Arizona, two Simplex projectors. These are of the latest model and are for use in the prison at Florence, and for the State Insane Asylum.

New York Exhibitors Hold Ball

The Third Annual Entertainment Is Attended by an Enormous Crowd. Many Photoplayers Present.

THE third annual entertainment and ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York was held at Terrace Garden on Monday, December 15. That is, it started on Monday and continued five or more hours into Tuesday. During the entertainment, which lasted until nearly midnight, the floor of the garden was filled and the galleries were crowded. When the seats were removed and it became necessary for the throng to find other accommodations, there was not much unoccupied space for it. The amusement provided was almost exclusively of pictures not yet released by the contributing manufacturers. An exception was Vitagraph's "Wild Beasts at Large," which has been shown in the Exclusive program. The subjects kept the crowd in good humor. Len Spencer was master of ceremonies, and he had use for the last ounce of his far-reaching voice. There were two singers, Dick Thomas and Paul Cunningham, and they made themselves heard. The feature of the evening, though, was the appearance of the photoplayers. Hearty applause greeted each of the favorites.

Pearl Sindelar, of the Pathe Company, was the first. She was followed by Paul Panzer, who told of his attendance at conventions of exhibitors in Pittsburg and Cleveland and of the splendid fellows he had met there; Crane Wilbur, Harry Eyetinge, Richard Neill, Edith Storey, Ned Finley, Irving Cummings, Eddie Dillon, Jane Fearnley, Mary Charleson, Maude Fealey, Lila Chester, Gertrude McCoy, Kate Price and Carl Laemmle, the jolly Vitagraph woman leading the president of the Universal out to the center of the stage to the immense enjoyment of the audience; Mignon Anderson, James Cruze, Ethel Grandin, Irene Wallace, Edward O'Connor, King Baggot, who made the crowd laugh when he said that he had come to the stage on a bet with General Manager Graham, of the Universal, that he would make every word he uttered heard distinctly in the Universal box (it seemed to be the belief of the audience that the president of the Screen Club had won); Matt Moore, Harry Benham, Ben Wilson, Alec Francis, Flo La Badie, Frank Lanning, Edward Clark, Owen Moore, Pearl White, Clara Kimball Young, Henry Walthall and John Bunny. It was about this time that Mr. Spencer reminded those present that they had been promised a look at the screen favorites and inquired: "Are you satisfied that they were here?" The answering shout was distinctly affirmative. Among others who faced the house were C. J. Hite, "Pop" Rock, Sam Trigger, J. C. Graham, Frank J. Carroll and "Doc" Willat, who tried on the throng his wonderful monocle. His finished impersonation of the "real thing" from the other side was hugely enjoyed.

Present were practically all of the film men now in New York, as well as exhibitors from many centers. The manufacturing companies had reserved boxes for their guests and players. The grand march was led by King Baggot and Mary Fuller. Just behind them were Master George Stuart and the charming little auburn-haired, brown-eyed Adelaide Lawrence, both of the Kalem forces.

The chairman of the committee of arrangements was A. Coleman, and the treasurer, Grant W. Anson. At the head of the reception committee was Adolph Weiss; of the entertainment, William Hilkemeier; of the invitation, J. A. Koerpel, and of the motion picture entertainment, Robert C. Whitten.

Judging by the numbers attending the ball of last year and this year, it will be necessary in future to secure either a larger hall or to increase the price of the tickets. It was some time before 10 o'clock on Monday evening that the fire authorities closed the gates leading to the hall, shutting out many hundreds, and they were able to enter only as others left. Undoubtedly there were many whose patience failed them and left.

There was but one souvenir, and that was furnished by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It consisted of a card shaped to conform to the Universal trade mark, attached to a ribbon of sufficient length to permit of hanging about the neck. Pasted to the card was a new Bison nickel. The souvenirs were distributed during the grand march, and there was a lively demand for them.

At the sign of the "Elephant Head," the box of the World Special Films Corporation was a busy place during the ball. The executive officers, Messrs. Phil Gleichman, E. Mandelbaum, Jules Burnstein, J. K. Burger, E. R. Davis and M. E. Hoffman were kept on the qui vive entertaining the following list of guests: C. J. Hite, J. R. Freuler, C. Livingstone of the Mutual, William Wright of the Kalem, John Hardin of the Ambrosio, S. Z Levine of the Solax and Blaché, P. A. Powers, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Swanson, Mark Dintenfass, Mr. and Mrs. David Horsley, J. C. Graham of the Universal, Wm. Smith, Powers Company, Herbert Miles, C. L. Plough, Joseph Hopp of the Universal, Chicago; A. D. Flintom of the Monarch Feature Film, H. Goldsmith of Schuyler Theater, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Miles, Mr. F. J. Rembusch of the Mirror Screen, Mr. Skerritt, King Baggot, Wen Milligan of the Billboard, Archie MacArthur of the Moving Picture World, and Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Offeman of the Eclair Company.

OUTCAULT IN MOTION.

Celebrated Cartoonist Embarks in the Picture Business with "Buster Brown" and Others.

R. F. Outcault, the cartoonist who created "Buster Brown" and his dog, "Tige," is the latest to enter the producing end of the motion picture business. Mr. Outcault is the head of the newly formed Outcault Film Company, a $50,000 concern, which will produce a series of single-reel comedies featuring "Buster" and his famous pet.

R. F. Outcault.

These comedies will show "Buster Brown, the Cowboy," "Buster Brown, the Chauffeur," and similar subjects. Work of production started Wednesday in the studios at 502 West Thirty-eighth Street, New York City.

"Buster Brown" is said to bring to Mr. Outcault a yearly income twice as great as that of the President of the United States. Outcault also is the recognized highest class and highest priced artist advertising expert in the country. He himself is the financial backer of the new firm.

In producing the pictures free hand will be given the director to spend money. After a few pictures, produced in New York, have been laid on the shelf, it is likely that the entire company will travel and film "Buster's" travels in the actual places named in the action.

This comedy series will be well advertised in that the "Buster Brown" cartoons appear in the Hearst newspapers in this country and England, and are syndicated to more than 100 others. Marketing affiliations have been practically completed.

GONDOLFI WITH LASKY.

Alfredo Gondolfi, for five years cameraman with Pathe Freres, has joined the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Film Company as principal cameraman, and left for Wyoming this week to aid in the production of the "Squaw Man," which is to be the first production of the Jesse L. Lasky organization, in which Dustin Farnum is to enact the leading role.

Oscar Apfel, formerly with Pathe and Edison, joined Mr. Cecil B. De Mille at Butte, Mont., this week, from which point they will endeavor to locate Maverick, the town in which Mr. Royal based the original locale of his play, "The Squaw Man." Tany A. Wamby, the original of Nat U. Rich in "The Squaw Man," has been discovered by Mr. Royal and will be used in the picture.

NEW FEATURE BY A NEW COMPANY.

The Citagraph Co., New York and Los Angeles, has recently completed the three reel feature "Life in a Western Penitentiary." The scenes are laid inside the walls of the Arizona State Prison through permission of Governor W. P. Hunt, and were produced by S. T. Reynolds and C. A. Taylor. The Citagraph Corporation recently completed films of the transcontinental highway route from Los Angeles to Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the American Automobile Association and United States Government Good Roads Department.

The Ernemann Film Printer

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

Among other articles on display at the newly opened branch of the Ernemann Company at 114 Fifth Avenue, New York, is the Ernemann "Imperatrix" printing machine, a highly scientific instrument for printing motion picture films from the negative. German workmanship is renowned the world over and it is well in evidence in this instance. The workmanship is one of the principal features of the machine, although its nicety as a device for the purpose does not depend altogether on that point. In every possible way it is up to date, especially as to adjustments for obtaining the highest point of accuracy.

In general, the device resembles most all printing machines. Close inspection reveals the fine material used in every part of it. Its action is a "finger feed" with an absolutely straight downward pull. This is obtained by a cam that works the pinion rack first outward horizontally, then vertically downward and inward again horizontally. The pinion rack is a solid chunk of fine steel, sliding in a dove-tail slot with no possible chance of variance or vibration. Into this solid pinion rack are screwed the pins, or fingers, which may be readily changed when worn.

There are eight different speeds to the motor, which are regulated by a lever at the upper right. On the upper left is another lever that controls eight different light intensities. The motor is driven from an ordinary incandescent socket and has two separate hand cut-offs which stop the printer mechanism, but not the motor. Besides this the mechanism is arranged to stop itself automatically in case anything should go wrong. The motor and mechanism are connected by a belt.

The main face plate of the printer is made of bronze steel and is reinforced by a rear plate of thick cast iron. This part of the device is built quite heavy in order to reduce vibration. The working mechanism throughout is made from silver steel with phosphor bronze bearings. The tension device at the aperture plate is automatic and of the type used in most recognized printers. The aperture is regulated at will while the machine is in operation. In front there is an automatic counting machine that records every image as it is exposed.

The mechanism is mounted in a teakwood frame that sets on four substantial legs. The take-up has been dispensed with for the reason that film is frequently scratched with the use of a take-up. Instead of a take-up, a film box on rollers sets beneath the cabinet, divided into two compartments; one for the positive and one for the negative. The positive compartment is light-tight and may be rolled through daylight to the developing rooms without further precaution.

One of the best features of the Ernemann printer is its accessibility. It may be opened in many ways and is very handy on that account. There are electrical attachments for changing to different voltages and light filters are furnished for intensifying weak negatives.

"THE RUINS OF ANGKOR-THOM" (Melies).

In this one-reel scenic there is brought to the eyes of the spectator one of the most wonderful sights on the face of the earth—the ruins of Angkor—a sight of which it is said that had it better traveling facilities, would be more popular with the tourist than the great pyramids of Egypt. As it is, Angkor, Cambodia, French Indo-China, is reached only after a five-days' journey by bullock cart and "Sampan" after leaving the nearest railroad station, a journey that is wearisome and very often dangerous.

On the site once stood a thriving walled city, Angkor, with a population of over a million. The inhabitants were the Kmers, who are believed to have migrated from India in the ninth century, A. D. The city reached the zenith of its power in the eleventh century and cultivated an art that expressed itself in sculpture and beautiful construction work that would be considered wonderful even for a modern European nation. But being so far from Europe, nothing of its wonders was known to Europeans until the French gained control of it and opened it up to the world some six years ago. Angkor was found a mass of stately ruins, for, sometime in the thirteenth century its population was completely wiped out, supposedly by the Annams, the people of the neighboring rival nation.

"The Ruins of Angkor-Thom," though photographed under great difficulty and unpropitious climatic conditions, is the premier offering of its kind. It is the Melies release of Thursday, December 25th.

Willat Will Make Pictures

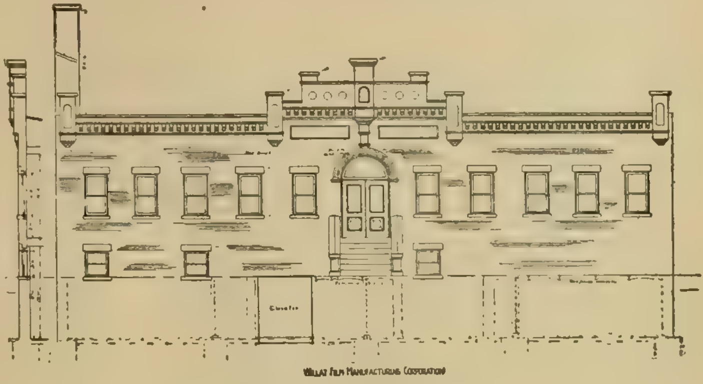
Well-Known Factory Manager Will Build and Equip a Hundred Thousand Dollar Plant in Jersey.

FOR several months, or ever since he resigned as factory manager of the New York Motion Picture Company, the trade have been looking anxiously for C. A. "Doc" Willat to announce his future plans as a maker of motion pictures. Those plans are now out and cover the erection of a studio and factory in Fort Lee, N. J., that will cost about $125,000 when fully equipped and ready for business. The new plant will be located on Main Street and Lynwood Avenue in that village, on a plot just adjoining the plant of the Eclair Company on the south. Excavation work for the foundations was started on December 8, 1913, and it is expected that the plant will be ready for occupancy in May.

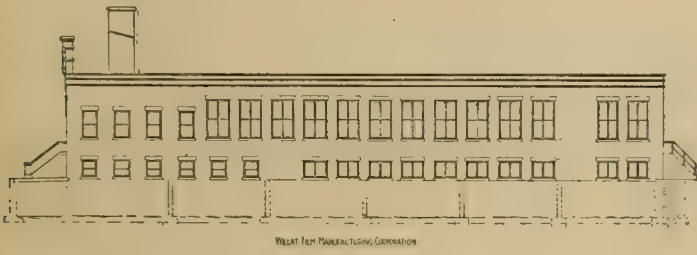
The studio building will be 120 feet by 80 feet on the ground and about 53 feet to the peak of the roof. It will be almost entirely enclosed in glass. The front elevation is shown in one of the accompanying engravings. The dressing rooms, property and other departments directly connected with studio work will range along one side of the building. A tank will be constructed in the floor 15 feet by 25 feet, for water and trap scenes. A lighting system of the most approved design will be one of the features of the new studio. Cooper-Hewitt and arc lamps will be used, but the novelty will appear in the arrangement and utilization.



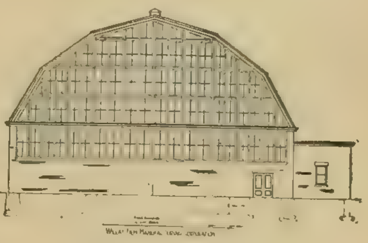
Front Elevation of Factory.

The factory building is of the same dimensions as the studio, but will have two floors. Here all the ingenuity of the promoter will be demonstrated. Mr. Willat made a tour of inspection of the principal factories of Europe before he planned his new plant and he has some brand new ideas to work out in its equipment. For example, all air will be washed and cooled or heated to required temperatures before it is distributed through the plant. All film will be washed by spraying and not be dipped as is customary. It will be carried through the various processes on special frames designed by Mr. Willat, and all positive film will be dryed on frames. Drums will be provided for drying negative film.

Twelve Bell & Howell perforating machines will be installed, and a battery of 36 printers, made after Mr. Willat's own design, will take care of that process. The printers will be automatic, so that one operator can run six machines. Corcoran tanks will be used in the developing and tinting and toning rooms.



Side Elevation of Factory.



Front Elevation of Studio.

In construction the factory is of brick, steel and concrete; fully fireproof.

In explaining his plans to a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Willat said that it was his intention to produce features of three or more reels in length and that there would be nothing too large for him to handle. It is his intention to do commercial work in his factory for the trade generally. This plan accounted for the large equipment.

"This enterprise is a bona fide business proposition," said Mr. Willat, and not a stock jobbing game. It is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York for $20,000, and I control all the stock, of which there is none for sale, and am president and treasurer of the corporation—the Willat Film Manufacturing Corporation."

Mr. Willat is known to be one of the best motion picture factory managers in the business. He is a son-in-law of W. T. Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, and received his early training in the making of motion pictures at the Vitagraph plant. When the "Imp" Film Company established a plant at 101st Street and Columbus Avenue, New York, Mr. Willat was engaged to operate it. He remained with that company more than a year, when he resigned to take charge of the New York Motion Picture Company's plant on East 19th Street. He continued to operate that plant successfully until a few months ago, when he resigned to undertake the present enterprise. His work with the "Imp" and the New York companies has been equal in quality with the best.

VITAGRAPH HAS "BROADWAY STAR FEATURES," TOO.

In the Vitagraph advertisement of December 20, announcement was made by that company to the effect that it would begin to issue a series of multiple-reel subjects in January under the brand of "Broadway Star Features." It is further explained that this series will have no connection with the Vitagraph regular releases and will consist of four, six and more reels.

In the same issue of the World a news paragraph announced that the Kalem Company was about to begin the release of a series of features under the brand of "Broadway." Two companies releasing pictures under what is practically the same brand is likely to lead to confusion.

HUTCHINSON RETURNS TO CHICAGO AFTER EXTENDED COAST TRIP.

Pres. S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Mfg., Co., after an extended trip on the Pacific Coast, will return to Chicago in time to spend the holidays with his family. His two sons, Hobart and Winston, will return home from school so as to make the family reunion complete.

Mr. Hutchinson has been on the coast for several months past, in fact he has spent almost the entire year in California, Oregon, Washington and the Hawaiian Islands, where, in addition to looking after the interests of the American, he has also devoted considerable time to the interests of the Mutual Film offices. After a short stay in Chicago he will again return to the coast.

Cataloging Motion Pictures.

Comprehensive System Explained and Illustrated in Detail

By Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton.

THE following classification is an abridgment of the "Manuel du Répertoire Bibliographique Universel" of the Institut International de Bibliographie de Bruxelles, commonly called the "Belgian Classification." This in turn, is a scientific development along practical lines of the decimal system of classification used by Melvil Dewey first at Amherst college, and later, in an enlarged form, in the library of Columbia university, and in the New York state library at Albany.

For many reasons it is an ideal method for classifying the pictures. In spite of its seeming complexity, it is simple in construction, is easily learnt and handled, is the result of careful study and practical experiment extending over many years, and in its present form is really the combined opinion of many of the greatest minds in each of the subjects classified as to what is most serviceable, practical and accurate. It is not only free from all the drawbacks and evils inevitable in any "one-man" system; but it has also this crowning excellence for both manufacturer and exhibitor, that a busy man, who knows little and cares less about the intricacies of a strictly logical arrangement, and wants merely a rough and ready method of filing things, so that he can find them again quickly and easily, can, with little trouble, as explained below, use the classification in this way and at the same time reap most of the benefits of the more scientific method.

There is however another method of filing information: namely by dictionary catalogs. This is the method used by the American Library Association and the Library of Congress on the ground that it is the easiest for the ordinary man to consult. Even so, all of their catalogs are prepared by properly qualified experts and when the busy man who has to do his own indexing, tries to make his own dictionary catalog, he is bound to come to grief.

On the other hand, the principles of a class catalog filed by numbers which are decimal fractions are, we might almost say, as easy to master and put into practice as those of a dictionary catalog are difficult; and once learnt enable one to index rapidly and easily with the practical certainty of finding again what is indexed with the least effort.

The Classification.

The following will give the form of such a class catalog with decimal system of notation for filing that has proven itself to be most satisfactory to workers of all kinds.

It consists of three parts, as follows:

1.—THE CLASSIFICATION ITSELF. This is given in two forms: a short synopsis (on page 5) for use in rough and ready indexing, and a more detailed form (starting on page 6) for use when the size of the catalog demands it, or by those who wish to make a more minute or as it is technically termed a closer classification. Unless a close classification is desired use only the synopsis on page 5. If at any later time you should wish to classify closer, it can be quickly done by simply adding to the numbers on the cards already indexed the extension of the decimals, using all matter as it stands but with this trifling addition.

2.—THE DECIMAL SYSTEM. Each topic or subject is given a definite number and all information about a topic is labeled with and filed away under that number. In this way you are always sure of finding all you have on a given subject, even when you file it under one word and, as you will often be apt to do, try to find it later under another name. Trades and handicrafts are two terms whose first letters are separated by about half the alphabet; both, however, refer to the same topic; consequently both words have the same number in the classification which can be found readily by looking up either word in the alphabetic subject-index.

3.—THE ALPHABETIC SUBJECT-INDEX. This gives in alphabetic arrangement with its proper file-number opposite every topic mentioned in the classification, and can be used to determine the proper classification.

The Main Divisions.

Moving pictures cover practically nearly every branch of human knowledge. Consequently any really practical classification for them must be capable of embracing all knowledge. This is the only way to avoid a division labeled "miscellaneous," so familiar to most beginners in cataloging. This division, which is no "division" at all but merely a trash-basket where the inexperienced cataloger puts everything he does not know what else to do with, gradually gets larger than all the rest of the catalog and makes the indexer quit in despair.

The scheme, here outlined, avoids all this and adds the advantage that you do not have to use subdivisions until you actually need them, but when you do wish to, you can insert them in the proper place for any given topic without interfering in any way at all with any other part of the classification. In other words, work once done is done; it does not have to be undone or to be done over again.

4.—THE BRANCHES OF KNOWLEDGE. In the following classification the whole field of human knowledge is regarded as a unit that is divided into ten fractional parts, each of which forms one class, or branch of knowledge. These great general branches of knowledge, under which all particular topics can be classified, are given below. To each has been assigned one of the decimal fractions from .0 (no tenths) to .9 (nine tenths).

| | | | | |
| ALL KNOWLEDGE | (0.0) | or | 0 | General topics |
| | (0.1) | " | 1 | Philosophy |
| | (0.2) | " | 2 | Religion |
| | (0.3) | " | 3 | Sociology |
| | (0.4) | " | 4 | Philology or Languages |
| | (0.5) | " | 5 | Natural or Pure Science |
| | (0.6) | " | 6 | Applied Science |
| | (0.7) | " | 7 | Fine Arts |
| | (0.8) | " | 8 | Literature |
| | (0.9) | " | 9 | History and the historical sciences |

5.—DECIMALS WRITTEN AS WHOLE NUMBERS. In the above classification we note several things. First, there is no need of using the figure 0. which in the above table signifies all knowledge. We can omit both the figure 0 and also the decimal point that follows and use simply the 0 to represent knowledge in general or general topics, 1 for philosophy, 2 for religion and so on. All we have to remember is that each number is really a decimal fraction of tenth and not a whole number although it is apparently written as such. In reality we write only the fraction part of the class-number, the whole number and the decimal point (0.) which are common to all of the written numbers being understood. Thus, we write 0 instead of 0.0 or .0, 1 instead of 0.1 or .1, etc.

6.—SUBDIVISIONS. Secondly, we see that the class-numbers run from 0 to 9 instead of as in the case of whole numbers from 1 to 10. Consequently, all we have to do in order to make subdivisions is to treat each class exactly as we treated knowledge in general. For example, 7 Fine arts, is made up of such things as architecture, painting, etc. Now Fine arts in general or General topics about the fine arts as a whole will be 7 or .70 and the different kinds of fine arts will form the subdivisions 71 to 79. Thus:

|---|---|---|---|---|
| FINE ARTS | (.70) | or | 7 | Fine arts as a whole or in general |
| | (.71) | " | 71 | Landscape art Gardens Sites |
| | (:72) | " | 72 | Architecture |
| | (.73) | " | 73 | Sculpture |
| | (.74) | " | 74 | Design Decoration |
| | (.75) | " | 75 | Painting |
| | (.76) | " | 76 | Engraving Illustrating |
| | (.77) | " | 77 | Photography |
| | (.78) | " | 78 | Music |
| | (.79) | " | 79 | Sports and Amusements |

In the same way we make subdivisions of every subdivision we wish as in the examples below:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 7 | Fine arts | a class of knowledge |
| 79 | Sports and Amusements | a division of fine arts |
| 792 | Theater The Stage | a form of amusement |
| 7929 | Special kinds of theatrical entertainment | |
| 79291 | Moving picture theaters and exhibitions | |

Or again:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 77 | Photography | one of the fine arts |
| 778 | Special applications of photography | |
| 7785 | In studying and apparently reproducing motion | |
| 77853 | Kinematography | The making of motion pictures |

7.—ALPHABETIC HEADINGS. In actual practice there is generally no necessity for such minute or, as it is technically termed, close classification. The cameraman or operator, for example, would probably use all of the subdivisions of 77 Photography; the exhibitor can probably file all he has under the heads, kinematography and trick pictures. The exhibitor, therefore, will find it more useful not to subdivide 77, and will label his cards of that subject either 77-kinematography or 77-trick and file both names under 77. If he wishes later on to file by the decimal subdivisions instead of the names, he has only to cross out the filing word, add the proper number for the name and file accordingly.

8.—ARRANGEMENT OF THE NUMBERS. Being decimal fractions, the class-numbers are arranged, not according to the number of figures in a number, but according to the value of each figure, beginning at the left. Thus, 77 comes between 7 and 8, the arrangement being just like that of the words in a dictionary.

9.—USE OF THE PERIOD. In the classification as printed, many of the numbers contain a period. This is not a decimal point but merely a mark to divide the number into sections, in the same way that we use a hyphen to split up a word into syllables. Thus, 77.853 and 792.91 are much more easily read and recognized than 77853 and 79291.

The Common Subdivisions.

Under the divisions, Literature and History are given certain tables called common subdivisions because they can be used to subdivide any of the class-numbers of the classification. Thus, 39. Manners & Customs can be subdivided for different countries like history and geography by means of the place-table that subdivides history, and for different races or peoples by the language-

Rules for Cataloging.

Get a card-file box, also some ruled cards and a set of index or guide cards, having tabs rising above the top edge for one-fifth the length of the card.

Take ten of the guide-cards, turn them so the blank side of the tab faces you, and then write on each tab a single number, beginning with zero and ending with nine. On the body of each card write the name of the main division that corresponds to the number on the tab. If you wish, you can omit 4, Languages, and use only nine guides.

Next, take the ruled record cards, and rule a vertical or perpendicular line for the whole length of the card, about one inch from the left hand edge. You can buy cards already ruled in this way, if you ask for cards with "library ruling."

Now suppose you want to index under "Children's-stories," Selig's Their Stepmother, released 2 May, 1913. Look up the class-number for "Children's-stories," either in the classification or in the subject-index. Opposite the name in both places you will find the number 087.1. This is the class-number. If you looked it up in the classification, you saw it was a subdivision of 08 Collections and Series, and that this in turn was a subdivision of O General topics.

Syn. 16:406 Com. 16:704
sp.rev. 16:1123

idea of a stepmother gained from her reading a fairy tale

Note that the space to the left of the vertical line is reserved for your filing marks. In the examples given above (§ 7) you would put 77 on the top line and write "trick" on the second line. This makes filing and reference easy.

Now take your finished card and file it behind the guide marked 0 and you have finished your cataloging of that picture. Do the same thing for every picture you wish to catalog and file each card by the first figure of the class-number.

10.—SUBDIVIDING THE CATALOG. Until you have to, don't. Say, however, you have quite a number of cards behind guide 3 Sociology. They belong to two or three different subdivisions but they are mixed up together under the one main division.

Take the cards from behind guide 3 and rearrange them according to the first two figures of their class-numbers, i. e., putting in separate piles all 32's, all 33's, etc. You will probably have quite a number marked 35 and 39, and a few scattered among the other subdivisions.

Take two guide cards, and on the tab of one write 35 and on the tab of the other, 39; on the body of each guide write the name of the subdivision. Lastly, file these new guides in your box between guides 3 and 4 or, if you have omitted 4, between 3 and 5.

Now put the cards whose class-numbers are 35 and 39 behind their respective guides, and put the remaining cards together between guide 3 and guide 35. When you get enough cards under 3 to warrant it you can make more subdivisions, but until then the few entries you have are just as readily filed or found under sociology in general.

FINALLY, DO NOT WORRY, IF AT FIRST YOU DO NOT UNDERSTAND. Follow the rules, and the method will explain itself.

If you have any difficulty, query the CATALOG SECTION of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

THE GIRL OF TODAY.

Marguerite Risser of Pathe Included in the Favored List.

Marguerite Risser, leading ingenue for Pathe Freres, was one of the bevy of beauties selected in the New York Times' recent contest to determine the ideal type of The Girl of Today. She is one of the actresses selected by the jury of famous artists from many thousands of photographs. Marguerite is one of the youngest ingenues playing leading parts in the profession, having just turned sixteen. Her entire theatrical career consists of one season in musical comedy. The fact that she comes of a theatrical family, perhaps, accounts for her rapid rise, for her mother who is always with her, before marriage played leading parts for the Frohman forces, and her aunt, Kathryn Osterman, is a well known comedienne. Marguerite, therefore, has been practically raised in the atmosphere of the theater. Last season her father was induced to let her go into musical comedy and he consented with the understanding with the management that Mrs. Risser would accompany Marguerite on the road.

Marguerite Risser.

Her success was immediate and pronounced. The production finally played New York and there Marguerite attracted the attention of Pathe Freres, who immediately engaged her for leading ingenue parts and she is rapidly becoming a great favorite as a photoplayer.

PICTURE MEN BUY HOMES.

Word comes from Los Angeles, Cal., that Francis Ford, director for the Universal Company, has purchased a charming bungalow site in the Hollywood tract and will build a combination Swiss chalet and studio. L. S. Peters and W. F. Alder, of the Universal forces, are also among the home builders.

"Actresses Must Be Young"

Director Griffith, of Mutual, Says So and Tells How Photoplayers' Reputations Are Made.

The recognition of youth and beauty as attributed necessary to success in motion pictures is not a small part of the reason for the greatness of D. W. Griffith, general stage director for the Mutual. From the very beginning of his career, Mr. Griffith has surrounded himself by good looking young actors and actresses, in whom he saw possibilities of exceptional talent, and moulded them into pantomimic artists. It is only necessary to review the popular idols of pictures, and pick out the ones who received their training under this noted director to see how much weight he has always placed upon their youth and appearance.

Mary Pickford is still a mere slip of a girl, while Blanche Sweet and Mae Marsh, both of whom have already made enviable reputations as screen artists, are only nineteen and seventeen years of age respectively. The two latter leading ladies are again under Mr. Griffith's valuable tutelage with the Mutual Film Corporation, as is also Robert Harron, another artist who, in spite of his established position as a leading man, is only twenty years of age.

Many interesting stories are told by moving picture stars of the methods used by Director Griffith to make them rise to sufficient heights of emotion during the playing of their first important parts. Mr. Griffith's ability to "make people act" approaches real genius and he will go to almost any length to get an actor to give him the effect that a scene demands. In the early days of Mary Pickford's career, when she was engaged to her present husband, Owen Moore, who was working with her in Mr. Griffith's company, the noted director would accuse her fiance of lack of intelligence until she lost her temper. Then he would turn quickly to the camera men and whisper "go ahead! grind!" The result was always an exhibition of temperament on the part of "Little Mary" that exactly fitted the character she was portraying.

Among the early trials of little Mae Marsh was the playing of a strongly emotional role in which she was required to show a high degree of sudden fright. The transition from perfect tranquillity to terrible alarm had to be made almost instantaneously and Miss Marsh could not seem to perform the difficult feat of acting perfectly enough to suit her exacting director. Mr. Griffith was seen giving secret orders to a property man and then the scene was started with the camera faithfully recording the action. This time Miss Marsh had no difficulty in getting the effect required of her, for at the correct moment, a double barrelled shotgun was fired off behind the scenery within a few feet of her head and her exhibition of sudden fright was all that could be desired by the most critical audience.

JACK NOBLE GOES MUTUAL.

Seven years as a lieutenant in the United States Army is part of the varied career of Jack Noble, a successful motion picture director who has just been added to D. W. Griffith's staff of directors producing pictures for the Mutual program.

Lieutenant Noble was an active figure in the quelling of the Boxer uprising in China, as well as an interested witness of the fall of Manila, so successfully staged by Admiral Dewey. His army training has been of inestimable value to him in the staging of large military dramas for the Thanhouser Company with which he was associated for three years and his varied experiences are frequently brought into play during the great variety of stories that a director is called upon to picture.

Mr. Noble was at one time stage director for the Solax Company and was also part owner of the Ryno Film Company, which produced a number of photoplays of note under his direction.

MIRROR SCREEN IN DEMONSTRATING ROOM.

There are lots of Mirror Screens in theaters throughout the country, but their presence in demonstrating rooms of film manufacturers and importers has been a rarity. The first firm of that kind to use one, so far as we know, is the New York office of Warner's Features. Frank Manning, Eastern selling agent of the Mirror Screen, gathered in this $250 order.

"TRAFFIC IN SOULS" GOES TO REPUBLIC.

The six-reel "Traffic in Souls," of the Universal Company, which for several weeks has been on the screen at Weber's Theater, in Broadway, will on Monday, December 22, be transfered to David Belasco's Republic Theater, in Forty-second street. It will follow the stage production of "The Temperamental Journey." Also it will mark the first of the Forty-second street houses to be given over to a film program in the middle of the theatrical season.

"CHILD REPRESENTATIVES" AT BALL.

At the New York Exhibitors' Ball, C. J. Hite sprung an innovation by having present for his Thanhouser and Princess Companies an array of "child representatives." Usually at trade balls, it has been the custom for prominent manufacturers to be represented by their best known directors and actors and to get away from custom, Mr. Hite hit on the "child representatives" idea. The result was a near-riot at the Thanhouser box. Mr. Hite's "child representatives" were Leland Benham, the Thanhouser Twins and Kidlet, for the Thanhouser Company, and Marie Eline and Dorothy Benham, for the Princess. None of the youngsters were over eleven years of age, and one, Dorothy Benham, hadn't reached three. Mr. Hite expects to have the same "representatives" at the Screen Club Ball, provided the whooping cough, the croup and the measles steer clear of the prodigies for another month.

FRANK BENNETT WITH MUTUAL.

Frank Bennett, formerly leading man for Florence Lawrence, has completed arrangements with the Mutual to appear under D. W. Griffith's direction. Mr. Bennett first attracted the attention of the theater going public by his artistic performances in "The Half Wit," and in "The Mayor and the Manicurist" in vaudeville. Later he devoted serious attention to the silent drama, appearing in Powers, Comet and Vitagraph pictures with marked success.

QUALITY OF APPRECIATION IS NOT STRAINED.

Bremerton, Wash., Nov. 23, 1913.

Editor Moving Picture World;

Dear Sir: I enclose herewith check for $3.00 for renewal of my subscription to the Moving Picture World for one year, and take this occasion to tell you that your paper has been of great assistance to me in the successful management of my business. Though you may not hear very much from this locality, still I venture to say that the Dream Theater, of Bremerton, is probably one of the finest and most up-to-date moving picture theaters of the North West. I show licensed programs but also show all the large, first-class, feature attractions which can be booked. Wishing you further success, I am, very truly yours,

E. Oswald, Dream Theater.

Mineral Point, Wis., Dec. 6, 1913.

Editor Moving Picture World;

Dear Sir; Enclosed find check of $3.00 for which please send me the Moving Picture World for the following year. I could not get along without it. Many of my friends and patrons delight in borrowing it from me and reading its interesting, entertaining and instructive pages. No wide awake exhibitor can afford to be without it.

Curtis J. Foster, Manager "Grand" Theater.

Cadiz, Ohio, Nov. 27, 1913.

Editor Moving Picture World;

Dear Sir: Enclosed find check for $3.00 for renewal of subscription to World for one year. With highest appreciation of your excellent journal, I am, very truly yours,

M. F. Walker, Cadiz Opera House.

NEW CHICAGO PICTURE HOUSE.

Bodkin & Keane, proprietors of the Star Theater at Evanston, Ill., and several others in various parts of the state, have leased a building on Madison Street, between Clark and Dearborn, Chicago, said to be the busiest portion of the "Loop." The present structure is four stories high and stands on a plot twenty and one-half feet wide by 168 feet long. The lease extends for a period of ten years, at an annual rental of $12,000. It is the purpose of the firm to remodel the building at an expense of $35,000, the ground floor, of course, being used for the theater, and the upper floors as business offices.

JOHNS-MANVILLE COMPANY'S CATALOGUE.

We are in receipt of a neat little pocket size catalogue from the W. H. Johns-Manville Company, of New York, manufacturers of asbestos goods. The title of this booklet is "Theater Necessities." It deals principally with asbestos theater curtains, operating booths and fire extinguishers. The booklet is a very neat little affair, well printed in two colors on heavy enameled stock and with embossed cover. It is profusely illustrated with half tones of the goods, for which the sizes and prices are fully given. We should think that this booklet would be a handy thing for exhibitors to have on file as there are many outside exhibition jobs to be taken care of and a theater manager should be in a position to tell the cost of such things at a moment's notice.

"THE FLY LEAF OF FATE" (Reliance).

Two justly famous artists, Consuelo Bailey and Henry Walthall, head the strong cast that presents "The Fly Leaf of Fate," released on December 22nd. This splendid drama, from the gifted pen of Russell E. Smith, is an excellent vehicle for the introduction of Miss Bailey to motion picture devotees, while Henry Walthall, who plays opposite the clever little Broadway favorite, interprets a strong role to which he is particularly well suited.

Cummings, a struggling young writer, is the hopeless lover of Hilda Hawthorne, who marries a wealthy banker. He vows to remain true to his ideal in spite of his broken heart and buries himself deeper than ever in his books. Mary, the daughter of the proprietor of an old book store which Cummings frequents, falls in love with him, but he does not realize the fact that the girl is experiencing the same hopeless love that has been his own bitter portion.

Scene from "The Fly Leaf of Fate" (Reliance).

He learns that Hilda has become a widow and immediately renews his attentions to her. But his eyes are strangely opened to Hilda's lack of character and Mary's beautiful love, resulting in a wonderful heart interest climax to an exceptionally high-class drama.

"The Fly Leaf of Fate" is one of those extremely rare single reel subjects—a strong drama well cast and artistically presented.

LUBIN PLAYERS GIVE DINNER.

In honor of the members of the Kalem and Edison stock companies, who are wintering in Jacksonville, Fla., the Lubin comedy company tendered them a "Poodle Roast" and dance which was held at the Lubin studio. Those present from the Edison studio were: Herbert Prior, Mabel Trunnelle, C. J. Williams, William Wadsworth, Alice Washburn, Arthur Housman, Richard Ridgeley, Richard Tucker, Bigelow Cooper, Elsie MacLeod and several others. Kalem was well represented by, Robert Vignola, Tom Moore, Guy Coombs, Alice Hollister, Marguerite Courtot, Harry Milliard, Ben Ross, and Jack Macklin. The Lubin entertainers were: Arthur D. Hotaling, Mae Hotely, Jerold Hevener, Frank Griffin, William Betts, Frances and Marguerite Ne Moyer, Julia Calhoun, William Bowers, Raymond McKee, Walter Heirs, Peggy Anderton, Leola May, Neal Morton, Garry Hotaling, George Sherwood and Henry Bard. The party did not get cold feet until early morning and all expressed their pleasure of a very enjoyable function.

"THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES" (Rex).

Perhaps it is only conventional to say that all women are more or less a mystery to the average man, and particularly those women who are strongly marked with elemental passion—who are creatures of emotion—but the fact has and will always remain a source of inspiration to the author of story and drama. Woman, "The Female of the Species"—her unexplainable actions under certain conditions—has been made the actual theme of this play.

It has been said, with much reason, that no woman writing for the screen to-day possesses a superior ability at putting humanness, modified by psychological suggestion, into a play than Lois Weber, leading woman and scenario writer of the Rex Company, and author of this piece. Certainly, the truth of this assertion is carried out, as will be seen by witnessing the play. She places before us in a series of finely drawn, coherent, intensely interesting scenes, two women—one a good "bad woman" and the other a bad "good woman"—and develops the types with remarkable insight into character.

Scene from "The Female of the Species" (Rex).

The locale of the story is in the West—that part where the rough cattleman still hold sway—for it is there that one is more apt to find the man and woman whose love runs warm irrespective of social convention. The Man In The Case, a sheriff played exquisitely by Phillips Smalley, who also staged the piece, is a solendid type of Western manhood, a perfect animal. Miss Weber enacts the part of the bad "good" woman, a gypsy, and Ella Hall is seen as the good "bad" woman, the sheriff's sweetheart.

Both these women love vigorously, blindly, and yet, while both are not intentionally bad, one sacrifices even her life for the object of her affections, while the other turns her back upon him and wrecks his and her own, though loving the while. It is simply one of those mysteries of woman nature—love affects each in a vastly different way without reason—and though Miss Weber, conscious of her own limitations in treating on her own kind, makes no effort at a solution, she has woven together one of the most profound, gripping and tragic plays that has come from her pen.

CHANGE IN UNIVERSAL RELEASE.

It was announced in the Universal Film Mfg. Company's advertisement, published last week, that its picture, "The Bride of Mystery," would be released on December 23. Since then the Universal Company has decided to substitute "The Bloodhounds of the North," a two part Gold Seal release on that date. Exhibitors will please note the change.

"RORY O' THE BOGGS" (Victor).

Mr. Kerrigan, supported by Miss Van Trump and a big, capable company, under the direction of J. Farrell McDonald, has made a feature [illegible] of the 18th century, that will undoubtedly create genuine interest. It concerns an avaricious uncle who steals, for his own son, the heritage of his nephew (Kerrigan), and the conscience which is aroused by the ringing of a death-bell. Rory, the nephew, grows to manhood a poor despised being. Mr. Kerrigan has never had a more superior role demanding fine character delineations and the sturdy manhood. At the death of Burke, the bulk of his fortune goes to his only son, Rory, a baby in arms. The child is in the keeping of his uncle, Sir Everett, who has a son of Rory's age. That his own son might inherit the fortune Everett causes Rory to be kidnapped.

Scene from "Rory of the Boggs" (Victor).

Twenty years later shows Sir Everett's son grown up to be a cad of dissolute habits, but wealthy as a result of the stolen heritage. Rory has grown to manhood in the home of a poor widow and her daughter, Eileen. Rory is in love with Kathleen, a peasant girl. Sir Everett's son wrongs Rory's foster sister. She dies and Rory swears vengeance upon the wrongdoer. However vengeance is taken out of his hands. The kidnapper gets into an altercation with the son and kills him. Rory finds the body, is accused of the murder, convicted and condemned to die.

The kidnapper, conscience stricken, confesses to a priest, a good friend of Rory's. The priest cannot dishonor the sanctity of the confessional by making the confession public. Instead, he goes to Rory's cell and changes clothes with the young man. Rory escapes, but is speedily recaptured. The time for the execution of Rory arrives. The death-bell tolls out mournfully. It arouses the conscience stricken kidnapper to action. He rushes to the gallow and arrives there an instant before Rory is to be hung. He confesses that the crime was his. Rory is liberated. The tolling of the death-bell also arouses the conscience of Sir Everett. He confesses the kidnapping and restores Rory to his heritage. This picture was [illegible] December [illegible]

GEORGE KLEINE WANTS AMERICAN ARTISTS.

With the erection of his new studio in Italy, George Kleine is now in the market for applications for the better grade of American talent to appear in his big productions. Mr. Kleine is willing to enter into contracts with the right sort of American artists to spend a part of the year on the continent in photodrama work for him. Mr. Kleine is open to proposals from well known American actors and actresses.

RAMO HAS RACE TRACK DRAMA.

The producers of the Ramo brand of pictures announce that a race track drama of no small importance will be issued by them on December 31. Utilizing the Thanksgiving meet at Jamestown, Va., and a liberal supply of real money, they have, in the opinion of C. Lang Cobb, Ramo sales agent, produced the ne plus ultra of racing pictures. Eight of the greatest running jockeys in the world—eight, count 'em—famous bookmakers, famous owners, famous touts and famous trainers are scattered all over the place. There is some great paper in course of preparation in colors and scenes that will make the public sit up. And—get this—the sale of prints in this country will be limited to 20 copies. Eleven territories have already been sold at a rate of fifteen cents per foot, and it is a four part subject at that. "In the Stretch" is the title of the production and the release date is December 31.

EXPANDING THE SOLAX PLANT.

This photo shows the Solax plant in the process of expansion. The building in the background is the old plant, 150 x 150 feet, three and one half stories high. The studio accommodates five sets in a row. The present factory has an equipment sufficient to turn out 100,000 feet of positive film a week. The frame work to the right is an outdoor stage used for light effect purposes and whenever work in the indoor studio reaches a state of congestion. The new two story building in process of construction is on the left, size 50 x 100 feet and in it will be housed the factory and laboratory to be removed from the main building. The added facilities will make it possible to turn out about 200,000 feet of positive film a week. The space in the foreground, which is also the property of the Solax and Blaché companies, will be improved and fenced in by ornamented iron railings.

CORWIN TAKES MORE SOUTHERN TERRITORY.

J. C. Corwin, the Texas capitalist who recently came up out of the Southwest and signed up a number of important brands on the Exclusive program, is working now in New York on his plan of extending the Big 4 Film Corporation, of Dallas, Texas, of which he is president and general manager, into other states. He purposes adding Northern Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana and later Kansas and Missouri. Mr. Corwin now controls Itala, Solax, Blache, Great Northern and Gaumont features for Texas and Southern Oklahoma.

"HOODMAN BLIND" (Pilot).

Director James Gordon, of the Pilot Company, has just completed assembling and putting in first class shape the latest feature production "Hoodman Blind," from Henry Arthur Jones' famous English drama, which was originally played by the well known star Wilson Barrett. The story is laid around London, and the English atmosphere is sustained throughout the entire production in the minutest details. A runaway accident separates Lennon and one daughter from his wife and the daughter's twin sister. Deprived of his memory, Lennon goes to Canada and becomes a farmer, at which he prospers. The daughter falls in with a band of gypsies. His wife and other daughter believe they are deserted. After many hardships the mother dies and the daughter is adopted by Lezzard, a former suitor of Mrs. Lennon. An explosion restores Lennon's memory and he returns to London to search for his wife and children. Finding no trace of his family, realizing he has but a short time to live, he leaves his money and will with Lezzard's son, who promises to find them and give them the fortune left by Lennon. The son appropriates the money to his own use. Through a succession of heart gripping scenes the story is followed to the climax, when retribution is meted out to the embezzler, and his accomplice, and the two sisters, who knew nothing of each other's existence, are re-united.

Scene from "Hoodman Blind" (Pilot).

Miss Harte plays the dual role of the sisters, and one of the most interesting scenes, obtained by double exposure, is where she comes into the room and greets herself. Among the other well known artists in this production are Herbert Barrington, Mrs. Guy Standing, and Miss Violet Stuart.

"THE HOUR AND THE MAN" (Essanay).

Laws are made forbidding men to murder—yet we murder those who disobey the law.

The story in itself is purely a heart interest one and the producer who directed the subject has indeed made a worthy dramatic feature from the script. Ruth Stonehouse as the character of suspicion held by the police department for the supposed murder of her husband, is seen at her best. Never before has she portrayed the role of a character with such remarkable artistic power as she has this. Francis X. Bushman as the counsel for defense puts the necessary punch into the story that is so essential.

Frank Maxwell (Francis X. Bushman), a young lawyer, disgusted with his worthless brother, discharges him. The brother, under an assumed name, marries Alice Williams (Ruth Stonehouse). Drink has made him the lowest sort of human and, by accident, he drinks poison in his coffee. Alice is arrested. The clerk of the court is sent to Maxwell with an order from the judge to represent the defendant. A heart-rending scene takes place between the two as they meet for the first time in years. Maxwell had loved Alice, but she loved another.

The big court room scene is a masterpiece of art, and Maxwell pleading for his client is, indeed, a scene to be remembered long. Alice is judged not guilty. The meeting after the trial between client and attorney brings forth the information that Alice did not know that she had married Maxwell's brother and Maxwell did not know he was defending the wife of his deceased kin. The ending is a happy one as Maxwell again vows his love for Alice and she is only too willing to accept his love and protection. This production is booked for release January 9th.

"THE PARASITE" (Lubin).

This is a three-reel, dramatic story by George Terwilliger, of the daring operations of a team of blackmailers, which work terrible affliction on the victim and in the end retribution on the criminals. Five of the most popular players of the Lubin studio are in the cast, including Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe. With all the unfortunate incidents of the story, the sequel is peaceful and happy.

Howard Lynn and his wife, Lottie, are typical blackmailers. They select for a victim, John Wellington, a rich society man who is tacitly engaged to Florence Randall. Lottie, by her arts of innocence and good looks, soon wins Wellington and, breaking his engagement, he asks Lottie to marry him. By consent of her husband, she agrees that they shall live as husband and wife in name only, until she has learned to love him. A secret marriage is performed at which Lynn officiates. Lottie then commences to fleece Wellington. The money is to go to Lynn. After a while Wellington suggests that his supposed wife shall fulfill her obligations and she, conscience stricken, decides to leave him. She writes a note of farewell and by placing her hat and cloak on the bank of the river leads him to suppose she has committed suicide. Wellington in his sorrow turns to his old love Florence and marries her. Years pass and Lottie and her husband have sunk to the depths of degradation and drink. They have a fearful fight, Lynn falls down stairs and is killed and Lottie is taken to the hospital. Partially recovered she resolves to visit Wellington, but he shows her his wife and child. Lottie returns to the hospital, she writes a letter confessing that they were never legally married and with the letter comes the news that Lottie has passed away.

"THE SECRET MARRIAGE" (Warner's Features).

Signor Corti, a promising tenor, gives singing lessons to Lydia, the daughter of the Marchioness of Belford. Their love for each other is soon discovered by the Marchioness, and Corti is immediately dismissed.

A letter found in Lydia's room by her brother, Robert, who has just returned home from college, after completion of his medical studies, bears evidence of the fact that Lydia has left to join Corti. As a result her mother succumbs to an old affliction. Robert swears vengeance and gives up the hope of ever marrying Lucy Barker, his sweetheart, to pursue the tenor.

Scene from "The Secret Marriage" (Warner's Features).

Corti and Lydia are secretly married and settle in a small country town. Annoyed by Lydia's jealousy, Corti accepts an offer to tour another country. Lydia is placed in a sanitarium to undergo treatment for nervousness, during his absence. Having been advised of her disappearance, Corti returns before fulfilling his engagements.

Robert, bent on avenging the seeming wrong done to his sister, Lydia, corners Corti, who furnishes evidence of his secret marriage to Lydia and thus becomes Robert's friend.

Corti accepts an invitation to a ball tendered by one of his friends. He is asked to sing, but cannot do so. A voice as though from heaven bids him sing, and immediately there is a dramatic meeting between husband and wife.

Great is his joy when Robert is informed by his sister that she is the companion of Lucy Barker, his former sweetheart. Thereupon he announces his marriage.

"SIXTY YEARS A QUEEN" AT HOTEL ASTOR.

Mr. E. Laurillard, of London, England, arrived in New York City during the week of December 15, bringing with him two important motion picture subjects, to be disposed of in America. Mr. Laurillard is one of the largest exhibitors in Britain, as well as one of the first to engage in that business in London, where he now controls sixteen picture theaters. Notable among these are the Electric Palace at the Marble Arch and the New Gallery Kinema, in Regent Street.

Recently Mr. Laurillard became interested in some big English productions, among which is a seven-part subject, entitled "Sixty Years a Queen." He has arranged to give a private showing of this subject to the press and the trade at the Hotel Astor on Sunday, December 21. Admission will be by invitation.

NEW ENGLAND AND CANADA.

THE office of John F. Fitzgerald, Mayor of Boston, advised all moving picture theaters this week that on Sunday, December 14, all houses could open at 5 p.m., instead of at 7 p.m., which was the regulation hour. This is merely in the nature of an experiment, and it is not known whether the five o'clock opening will become established as the regular thing. The extra two hours will be a great boon to exhibitors, and especially to the larger houses. The big theaters were able to give only one show each Sunday night, but this five o'clock movement will enable them to run two performances. Provided no complaints are received, there is reason to believe that the 5 p.m. opening will be permanent, for which all exhibitors are duly grateful to Mayor Fitzgerald.

Moxley Blumenberg, president of the Maine State Branch of the Exhibitors' League, writes from his new Portland theater, Portland, Maine, that the local is coming along in good shape, and that the next meeting is scheduled to be held at Portland some time in February, 1914. Mr. Blumenberg recently disposed of the Casco Theater, Portland, intending to go to New York to engage in business with his brother. Some hitch regarding the patents covering the machine which they were to put on the market came up, so Mr. Blumenberg returned to Portland and took hold of the Portland Theater, which offers Universal films and Famous Players Features. Mr. Blumenberg has the exclusive service on both these, and is doing a big business.

"The Streets of New York," a three-part Pilot feature, was featured by both the Loew houses in Boston this week. The St. James and Orpheum theaters both report that this Pilot was unusually interesting to the audiences.

Jacob Lurie, general manager of the Beacon Theater, Boston, has had the facade of his house painted. Business is of the capacity variety.

Manager Hugh O'Neill, of the Star Theater, Boston, has had an exciting week of it, all due to the booking of the "Black 107," a three-part Ruby feature. Mr. O'Neill secured first booking on the picture and exhibited it on Monday, December 8, to big business. On Tuesday morning, he was forced to take the picture off by order of the Mayor's office, as the feature had not been passed by the National Board of Censorship. Mr. Sam Grand, of the Novelty, hurried to New York, and by Wednesday afternoon the Star was again exploiting the "Black 107," as the Censorship folks passed the picture. Mr. O'Neill used the feature on Thursday and Friday also, and states it was one of the best money makers he has ever used. Protea, the five-part feature of the World Special Films Corporation, is booked for the Star next week.

Manager J. A. Emery, of the Star Theater, Bar Harbor, Maine, has closed his house for the winter season.

Manager Ellridge Campbell, of the Majestic Theater, Keene, N. H., reports business as good, and getting better every day. The Majestic was recently leased by the Eastern Theaters Company, and Mr. Campbell was chosen to make a "regular house" of it. "With the aid of Warner's Features, I'm getting along very nicely," says Ellridge, and "I expect to do even better as the quality of my programs become known to the Keene-ites."

General Manager J. A. Eslon, of the New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston, has received his first shipment of the twenty-four-sheet posters he is giving free to Universal theaters which are willing to have these sheets posted on the billboards for a thirty-day showing. The request for these beautiful stands, which boost not only Universal films, but also the houses in which they are exhibited, has been very large indeed. One of the exhibitors who has realized the true advertising value of these sheets is John L. Sullivan, the erstwhile prizefighter, who is now operating the Empire Theater at Brockton. "John L." has ordered twelve of them. The Universal Exchange is also giving its customers a little Christmas gift, in the way of an artistic slide, wishing everyone a "Happy New Year and a Merry Christmas."

On Monday evening, December 15, the Dudley Street Baptist Church at Boston, became a convert to motion pictures. A whole evening's entertainment was provided, and illustrated songs were used, as well as the photoplays.

"Theodora," a Warner feature, was used at the Comique Theater, Boston, this week, while the Star Theater, almost next door, was also on the job with a first-run Warner.

Shea's new theater at Fitchburg, Mass., is now almost ready to open. This house has been built at considerable expense, as Mr. Shea insists on the best of everything. Another house now building is the theater at 128 Brighton Avenue, Allston. Messrs. Walker and Watson are the owners of the new house, the details of which have already appeared in these columns.

Sidney W. Winslow, the multi-millionaire president of the United Shoe Machinery Company, Boston, made a big hit as a moving picture lecturer in the United States District Court, this week, where he is on trial, together with his company, for alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. For forty minutes Mr. Winslow explained to the court the pictures as they were thrown on the wall of the darkened court room. At the close, so fully had he explained the complicated process of shoemaking, with the aid of the pictures, that not many points were left in doubt. Even Judge Putnam, who stated he had never seen a moving picture show in his life before, did not ask any questions. Twenty-six separate pictures were shown, depicting the whole process of "bottoming" a shoe. The pictures showed the machines at rest, in rapid and slow motion, and with the operator putting shoes through the various processes of manufacture. Everyone who witnessed the show said it was one of the best and clearest expositions of a complicated subject ever made in a courtroom, where its place is usually taken by charts and prints, which require long and tedious explanation. Assisting Mr. Winslow at the machine were John F. O'Connell and William F. Hall, of the company's publicity staff.

A recent incorporation is the Lyric Amusement Company of Bridgeport, Conn., with a capital stock of $25,000.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union, Boston Local 182, held a meeting this week and declared that non-union men were being employed at the Emmett Theater, Jamaica Plain, and that grievances were existing at three South End moving picture houses. A committee was appointed to look into the causes. It was also stated that some people who have tried to run schools for operators are now endeavoring to establish an I. W. W. organization of operators. Agent Franke of the local reported that he expected an answer next week from the Boston school committee officers regarding non-union men doing work in the schools and evening centers. A committee has been appointed to investigate a report that non-licensed men were instructing in a public school in a nearby city, and that they had children in the asbestos operating room. The danger is great, and the law, the local stated, is so strict that even skilled licensed men are not permitted to let anyone inside the booths, when they are operating the machines.

Agent John J. Barry, who was one of the international union delegates to the A. F. of L. convention at Seattle, Wash., reported to a special meeting of the Boston Theatrical Stage Employees' Union 11, in Boston this week. More than 200 members gave Mr. Barry an enthusiastic reception. He stated that the organization is in a flourishing condition all over the country. International President Charles W. Shea was taken ill at Seattle, and is now in a serious condition at his home in New York City. Barry, who is a former international president, was one of the party under whose care President Shea was brought from Seattle to New York, and this delayed his arrival in Boston. Nine new members were initiated at this meeting of the local and four applications were received.

Needham, Mass., is at last to have a moving picture theater—just one—and the Needham Fathers will censor the films, and close the house at 10:30 sharp! The fight between the promoters of the theater and the residents of the town, a fight that threatened to split Needham into factions, has been won by the photoplay interests, as the selectmen decided this week to grant a license to David Simon on Chestnut Street. The conditions that surround the license, however, are unusually strict. They call for a censoring of all shows by the selectmen, the closing of the theater by 10:30 p.m., no Sunday shows, and the barring of children under sixteen years of age, unless accompanied by parents at all evening performances. The application of Carl Erickson for a license has been refused, and the application of a committee of citizens who wish to give exhibitions of an educational nature has been held over pending the committee's ability to find a suitable building for the show.

Ford F. Swett, traveling representative of the Nicholas Power's Cameragraph machines, underwent an operation in Boston this week and expects to be out of the game for about three weeks. Mr. Swett has many friends in the trade, all of whom wish him a speedy recovery.

The first presentation in Boston of "A Boy and the Law," a five-part picture, founded on the life of William Eckstein, was given at Tremont Temple, Boston, this week. The film is acted throughout by young Eskstein, and showed in detail the work of Judge Brown, founder of the Utah Juvenile Court, the parental court of Gary, Ind., and the author of the Federal parental and educational court bill.

Greater Boston's 4,500 Boy Scouts and others were greatly interested in "The Making of a Scout," a picture shown at the Huntington Avenue Theater, Boston, this week. "The Making of a Boy Scout" came to Boston under the auspices of the Greater Boston Council.

A truly representative Boston audience gathered in Tremont Temple, Boston, on Saturday morning, December 13, to hear Dr. Montessori speak of his "Montessori system of child training. Moving pictures were a most important part of the lecture.

Manager Gordon Wrighter, of Poli's Theater, Springfield, Mass., was surprised on December 3, by his friends, who gave him a regal "blow-out" at the Highland Hotel, at which some forty-five people were present. Mr. Wrighter was presented with a beautiful hammered brass desk set by his friends. The party was a huge success, lasting until the wee small hours.

A very persistent effort is now being made by the moving picture trade of Boston to have an exhibitors' ball in the Bean Town, run on much the same lines as was the ball in New York. The various exchanges are doing their utmost to put the thing across, and promise to have their "stars" present to grace the affair. Mechanics' Hall is the proposed spot for the ball.

Manager Felix Wendelschaefer, of the Providence, R. I., Opera House, had a "dark" theater the week of December 8.

The Queen's Theater, at Hamilton, Canada, is the latest moving picture house to open in this city. The house has a very good location on Barton and Ottawa Streets, and will play to a policy of pictures and songs. This makes about eight picture houses for Hamilton.

The Lyric Theater, at Bridgeport, Conn., has answered the demand for feature pictures, and henceforth will show "feature photoplays only." The Elk, Main, Bijou, Arco, Lenox, Crescent, Star, Electric, Astoria, West End, and Palace, all of Bridgeport, are offering picture programs.

Louis D. Gormly is now in charge of Fox's Theater at Waterbury, Conn. Kinemacolor and vaudeville is the policy.

C. W. Wilson is now in charge of the Garden Theater, Waterbury, Conn., a picture house. Former Manager Charlie Chapin has resumed his position with a local newspaper.

Marcus Loew's new theater at Toronto, Canada, is now about ready to open its doors.

Louis J. Muller states that he has had plans drawn up for a photoplay theater at New Britain, Conn. The house is a small one, only to seat about 300. The theater will have a metal front, and will be ready for its opening by New Year's Day. A store is to be converted.

Albert Denaghy, of Woodstock, Canada, who managed Griffin's Theater there for some time, has been transferred to Griffin's house at Stratford, Ontario.

Manager H. A. Chenoweth, of the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass., is doing his usual capacity trade.

"Quo Vadis?" made good at D. O. Gilmore's Court Square Theater, at Springfield, Mass., this week.

Ernest E. Cleveland, of the State Police at Springfield, Mass., is agitating in favor of the uniforming of all theater attendants and ushers. Mayor Denison has the matter under advisement.

The Colle Theater, Greenfield, Mass., is "dark" this week.

Holst and Hoolbeck, East Portchester, N. Y., have secured the contract to build a one-story moving picture theater, to cost $15,000, for O. M. Creamer, of Greenwich, Conn.

E. P. Fitzgerald, of Worcester, Mass., is to build a photoplay theater in this city, and the plans call for a house 50 by 90 feet.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

H. B. STRUBEL, of the Empire Theater at Shelby and Market Streets, is seriously considering making improvements which will double the capacity of his theater, increasing the seating capacity from 400 to 800, as he is now unable to handle the crowds which seek admission to his house.

Joseph Goldberg, until recently manager of the Hippodrome and Olympic Theaters, has resigned to devote his time to handling the New Grand Theater at Twenty-seventh Street and Portland Avenue, which he purchased of its founder and owner, Charles Berger. He reports that business has been excellent, the cold weather helping considerably. E. P. Simon, nephew of Max Simon, has succeeded Mr. Goldberg as manager of the Hippodrome and the Olympic. Mr. Berger announced that he is out of the motion picture business for good, as his box business demands all of his attention.

The M. P. Motion Picture Company, of Indianapolis, which recently purchased a tract of land near New Albany, Ind., for use in making films, is putting up fences and otherwise improving the property for its use, and will soon start work, performers and cameramen being expected shortly.

Manager B. A. Plessinger, of the Independent Moving Picture Service Company, received the cold snap with more than a little regret, as cold weather always injures the company's business, which is handled chiefly with exhibitors in the smaller towns. Miss Plessinger said that the country people stay at home in cold weather, making things slow with picture exhibitors, while the contrary is the case in cities.

A fine specimen of the noble red man, calling himself Chief Red Eagle, of the Carlisle Indian School, was well received by audiences at the Novelty Theater last week, where he made an address covering various subjects. He stated that he was on a walking contest from Michigan City, Ind., to Buffalo, N. Y., for a large cash prize.

Illustrated dodgers, giving the stories of coming plays, are being used by the management of the Novelty Theater in Louisville, and are proving excellent as a means of bringing chance patrons back, as well as of keeping up the interest of regular attendants.

James H. Daly, of St. Louis, Mo., who covers little towns of 300 to 1,000 population with a moving-picture outfit, was in Louisville last week for the first time in ten years. Mr. Daly presents his shows in school houses, churches, stores, opera houses or anywhere else that offers, and has been very successful. Mr. Daly commented on the immense strides which have been made in the business during the past ten years, as illustrated by the situation in Louisville, where during his last visit motion pictures could be seen only in one of the theaters, about half as much as the reel unit of today being shown at each performance. Mr. Daly was en route to St. Louis.

Thomas Barnett, Jr., is traveling through Kentucky and Southern Indiana looking for good locations for new houses, on behalf of the Switow Amusement Company and the Falls City Amusement Company. Mr. Barnett will take the management of one of the houses of one of the companies shortly, at present giving most of his time to the work indicated.

Arthur Mitchell, proprietor of the Dixie Theater at Russellville, Ky., has obtained a lease on the new building which is being erected by Charles Ryan for the postoffice and a picture show, and will move in as soon as the necessary work of fitting the room for the Dixie can be completed. The ceiling of the new room is 17 feet high, and a seating capacity of 100 more than that of the present theater will be available. The front of the building will be erected by the Chicago Decorating Supply Company. Mr. Mitchell has placed an order for a new gold fibre screen for the new house, and other equipment will be of the best in every respect.

Rodney C. Davis, proprietor of the Kozy Theater, one of the most popular motion picture houses in Paducah, Ky., is planning to build a new house on the site of the Kozy. Rankin Kirkland, of Paducah, will be associated with him in the venture. The building will have a frontage of 26 feet and a depth of 150 feet, with a seating capacity of about 500. The present house is 20 by 90 feet, with a seating capacity of only 240. The front part of the new building will be two stories in height, with an attractive decorative effect designed to make it conspicuous day and night. Brick will be the material used. A Wurlitzer pipe organ will be installed. Mr. Davis returned recently from a trip to St. Louis and Chicago, where he visited a number of theaters with a view to obtaining ideas for use in the new house.

Dr. Irvin Abell, a Louisville surgeon, has purchased the Walnut Street Theater property, at a price said to be in the neighborhood of $130,000. The property was formerly owned by the Walnut Street Land Company. The sale will in no way affect the conduct of the theater, which is at present devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures. The Walnut Street Amusement Company holds a fifty-year lease on the theater.

W. C. Brewer and Alex. Blane, of Cadiz, Ky., have completed the work of mounting their motion picture outfit on a wagon, and started out on a trip which will cover most of the smaller towns in Kentucky which have no picture shows. They will make their way through the South during the winter months. The engine and dynamo are mounted on a two-horse wagon, which will also carry all other paraphernalia used in connection with the enterprise.

Alexander Brothers & Company, of Cadiz, Ky., have completed their new picture house, which has been named the Gem, and opened it to the public. The house is one of the prettiest in that section.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

BUFFALO.

HAROLD EDEL, manager of the Strand Theater, Buffalo, has organized the University Theater Co., with a capital of $50.000. Mr. Edel is president of the concern, M. Schwartz is vice-president and M. Strauss, secretary and treasurer. The company will erect a $75,000 moving picture theater at Irving and Genesee streets, Syracuse. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,500 on the main floor. Across the rear of the theater will be an elevated section, with a mezzanine door, for the exclusive use of two tiers of boxes. There will be a triple proscenium, the latest indirect lighting system and perfect ventilation. Under the stage will be a large refrigerator, over which fresh air will be drawn and cooled for use in the house in summer. Fresh air will be drawn over a system of hot water pipes and heated for use in cold weather. There will be a $10,000 pipe organ and an orchestra of twelve pieces. Mr. Edel reports that he hopes to have as organist a person prominent in the conservatory of music at the University of Syracuse. Students at the University will act as ushers and the men at the door and in the box office will be in full dress. The house will be four blocks from the college, where the attendance averages five thousand, so that the patronage will be high class. The prices will be 10, 15 and 25 cents. The excavation has begun and it is planned to have the theater completed by May 1st. Mr. Edel says he is negotiating for the construction of a $60,000 moving picture theater in Buffalo.

Manager Edel featured "Checkers" in moving pictures at the Strand recently. To advertise the program he had three young women, dressed as jockeys and mounted on race horses, make frequent trips along the principal streets. At this house he has a large pipe organ and an orchestra of eight pieces. He uses the General Film Company's service. The Strand seats are 10 and 25 cents.

P. A. Powers, president of the Warner's Features, Incorporated, recently called on D. J. Chatkin, manager of the Buffalo branch of that concern at 23 West Swan street. Mr. Chatkin has been informed that his company has closed a contract for a series of important Western features made on the famous Miller Bros.' 101 Ranch, which will be advertised under the name of "The Waif of the Plains." Real Indians, many cattle and plenty of fighting and action will be featured. The introduction of this film in Buffalo is awaited with much interest. According to Mr. Chatkin, the Buffalo branch showed a marked increase in business during November, and prospects for 1914 are very bright. J. H. Beaver, manager of the Bijou Dream Theater, Buffalo, recently contracted for Warner's first-run feature, "Hand of the Law," showing scenes at the Colorado State Penitentiary. Buffalo moving picture men are much interested in a statement recently issued by the Rt. Rev. James Henry Darling, bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Harrisburg, Pa. The local managers are saving his arguments in favor of moving pictures and many use them with other similar statements to offset the next so-called reform wave, in case one should reach this city. Bishop Darling said: "The moving picture theater is one of the greatest foes of the saloon, and I am not opposed to it as are some clergymen. One of our greatest educational forces is the moving picture house. It provides the poor man with badly needed recreation. In the diocese of Harrisburg are many villages in which there are two or three saloons and no moving picture theater. I would like to see that condition reversed. Of course, there are some bad moving pictures, but they are far outnumbered by the good ones, and we can get rid of the bad ones."

Manager Beaver, of the Bijou Theater, Buffalo, has advanced his price of admission from 5 to 10 cents. The change has not affected his attendance.

Manager Walter H. Foster, of the Family Theater, recently had as his guests a party of Buffalo ministers, school teachers and children, who witnessed the film production, "A Boy and the Law." Judge Willis Brown who, with William Eckstein, "the former Russian law defier," posed for the pictures, outlined the Utah plan of parental courts for delinquent youngsters. He criticized locked doors, barred windows and the branding of children as criminals.

Parcels are checked free. He has been informed that the Duchess of Conneaut has refused to allow the tango to be danced at government house festivities at Ottawa, Ont. He says this will not induce him to call off the tango contests on his stage each week.

The Frontier Moving Picture Theater, Rhode Island street and West avenue, Buffalo, will open shortly.

OHIO.

ON his way home after the night's work, Samuel Shagrin, proprietor of the Delmar Theater, East 71st street and Central avenue, Cleveland, was waylaid and murdered by three masked footpads Sunday night, December 14. Shagrin was accompanied by his operator, Albert Kauffman, and the two fought their assailants desperately in an effort to prevent the thugs from using revolvers. Shagrin died in St. Luke's hospital a few hours after he was shot in the abdomen. The Knights of Joseph, a national order to which Shagrin belonged, has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the slayers, and the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held a meeting Tuesday, arranging another reward. Shagrin carried $150 in small change, the day's receipts from the theater. When the three highwaymen confronted Shagrin and Kauffman and demanded their money and valuables, Kauffman struck the nearest man to him, knocking him to the sidewalk. In a moment the five were in combat. One of the thieves wrenched himself from Kauffman's hold and running back, fired one shot, which struck Shagrin. Cleveland police have been given accurate descriptions of the three assailants and arrests are expected at any moment. Shagrin leaves a widow and two sons. Shagrin just recently purchased the Delmar Theater from Joseph Grossman, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

In the opening of the new Columbia Theater, between Fourth and Fifth Streets, Dayton, the city became possessed of one more high class amusement place. The Columbia is under the management of C. J. Gross and the best offerings in the motion picture line are being presented to patrons. The house opened with "The Princess of Bagdad" and a feature program made up of General Film Company specials. Mr. Gross spared no expense in erection and equipment of his theater and every detail was under the careful supervision of Architect Gustave A. Niehus. The house cost more than $30,000 and is exclusively for motion pictures. There are five hundred seats and the house has been made as fireproof as modern invention can make it. Mr. Gross installed a Wurlitzer organ.

Fifteen reels of pictures were shown at the Kent Opera House, Kent, O., Thanksgiving afternoon and evening. Manager Hartman made up the program for the occasion and catered to more than 1,400 patrons at his first afternoon performance. It was the biggest thing in its line that has been shown in Kent, and Manager Hartman was justly pleased with the results.

The Idle'our Theater at Cuyahoga Falls has vacated the building it has occupied for some months for a new bakery established by Otto Walker.

PITTSBURG.

ROWLAND & CLARK have secured a long term lease on centrally located property in East Liberty, this city, where they will erect, according to their statements, the finest motion picture theater in Pittsburg. The building is to be strictly fireproof and will have a seating capacity of 1,000. The managers will make it a ten cent house.

George H. Hobson will build this winter a one-story motion picture theater and bowling alley in the Nineteenth Ward. The house will cost about $100,000 and will be located on Beechview Avenue.

Motion picture house owners in Altoona were compelled to disinfect their theaters recently as a smallpox scare hit the city. The disinfecting closed up the houses for at least a day.

The Victoria Theater, a house that ran vaudeville and moving pictures, changed its policy this month and is now showing burlesque.

The Liberty Theater, on Liberty Avenue, has also changed its policy from a mixed vaudeville and moving picture show to motion pictures. The house gives feature plays and shows them for a week's run. Prices have been maintained at ten and twenty cents, the latter price for reserved seats. It is the only downtown theater charging more than five cents admission for a motion picture bill.

C. D. Lautner will build an addition to the motion picture theater on East Ohio Street, Northside. The house has been a paying proposition since its start and by increasing the capacity of the theater it is hoped to also increase the earning capacity. The alterations and additions will cost $4,600.

Thomas Burke, Jr., will build a two-story brick structure at 53-55 Fullerton Street, to be used as a motion picture house. The theater will cost about $7,500.

The McBride heirs will spend $2,000 in remodeling and repairing the building at 525 Wylie Street. When completed the structure will be utilized as a motion picture theater.

All the downtown theaters raised their admission charge to ten cents on Thanksgiving Day as a result of an agreement among the managers. The plan was entirely successful and it is hardly probable that any one turned away because the price was raised five cents.

Judge Josiah Cohen, one of the most prominent jurists in this city, and well known throughout the State, said recently that the agitation in Chicago for the elimination of motion pictures showing men using guns would not lessen crime among the youth of the country. Judge Cohen said it is not the fault of the pictures that young boys go on a rampage, and he scored those reformers and newspapers who always give the motive for a crime as "impressed by motion picture shows." Judge Cohen, who presides at the bench in the local juvenile court, further stated that he has not yet found a juvenile prisoner who has received his ideas of criminality from a picture film. "The cause of a great many of the shootings which come into the criminal courts of the country," he continued, "is due to the ease with which one so disposed may purchase a gun, and the failure of the proper authorities to enforce the law against carrying concealed weapons. Crimes such as we have had here recently can be traced to the perfunctory enforcement of laws against the indiscriminate carrying of weapons. The statutes of Pennsylvania are plentiful enough to protect the community from widespread use of revolvers without further ordinances, provided the present laws are enforced, but the police authorities appear to be negligent. The blame for youthful outbreaks may be placed rather on the fault of the parents, and the lack of enforcement of present laws than on the motion picture theaters."

A Pennsylvania charter of incorporation has been granted to the Kineto Amusement Company, of Pittsburg. The incorporators are William Mayer, Charles Mayer and Fred H. Mayer, and the concern is capitalized at $5,000.

INDIANA.

C. N. STEVENSON has leased a location opposite the Traction Terminal station in Indianapolis and has let a contract for remodeling it for a motion picture theater. One of the prominent bits of furniture, always under a spotlight, will be a clock adjusted as to correctness of time by the Western Union hourly service. Stevenson expects to make advertising capital of the clock. He will use the General Film Service. The house will seat about 600.

Mayor Harry R. Wallace, Indianapolis, has asked J. M. Rhodes, of the Motion Picture Managers' Association, to make a statement of how the money set aside for charity from Sunday performances at motion picture theaters is expended. The association has been turning over $25 a week to the mayor's office to be expended for charity as the mayor sees fit. Mayor Wallace states that he will not change the policy of the administration toward the moving picture men, who have been permitted to show on Sunday provided they gave part of the proceeds to charity.

Dr. J. R. Eastman, who bought the city fire headquarters building, Indianapolis, is to remodel it for use as a moving picture theater.

The Fotoplay Amusement Company, Indianapolis, has dissolved.

The Masonic Temple, Rushville, Ind., is to be rebuilt with one-half the lower floor especially designed for a picture exhibit. The announcement was followed by a rush for inquiries from would-be exhibitors, anxious to get the location, which is a good one.

Mrs. Axtel Pierson, owner of a picture theater at Connersville, Ind., has been stricken with paralysis.

G. J. Rapp, Shelbyville, Ind., is to open by Christmas a house opposite the Alhambra. He has not decided upon a name as yet, but has arranged for the General Film Service, has a Power's 6-A machine, and a Ft. Wayne AC to DC compensarc. The house will seat 350 and the charge is to be five cents.

Barton & Olson are rapidly completing plans for the Isis, the new $20,000 house which they will build on the site of the present Illinois Theater. The new house is to have a $10,000 Kimball pipe organ.

The same men are also stockholders in the People's Amusement Company, which is building a new house at Central Avenue and Twelfth Street. Cy Saffel will manage this house. They also have taken a lease on the Talbott Theater, Twenty-second and Talbott Streets, and a house at Alabama and Sixteenth Streets. All of their houses will be under the general management of J. I. Schnitzer, of the Central Film Service. The Isis and the Alabama Street house will be ten cent houses, and the others five cent houses. The Isis will seat 800, and the others 600, except the Talbott, which seats 500. All of the houses will use the Universal Film Service.

Adam Reichel will erect a moving picture theater at Senate Avenue and Fortieth Street at a cost of $4,000. It will be a one-story brick structure.

The Switow Amusement Company, Louisville, Ky., which bought the Rex Theater at Bloomington, Ind., has remodeled it and after being closed temporarily for the changes, is now open again to good business.

LUBIN.

HER BOY (Dec. 29).—Jim Davis has been so accustomed to maltreating his wife that she is driven to leave him, taking with her their young son. Years afterward the boy, grown up, goes West and stakes a mining claim which proves rich. He sends for his mother to come and share his fortune. While she is on the way, "lookouts" employed by a gambling palace, hear that the young man has cashed in a large amount of ore from his claim and plot to victimize him. They take the proprietor of the joint into their scheme and he agrees to help. The three men inveigle the young man into a stiff poker game in a private room on the night his mother is to arrive in town.

Meanwhile, Tom Saunders, a citizen of the town and friend of the boy's, has been gratifying his passion for gambling, and his daughter in going to the gambling hall overhears the gamblers tell of their plot to defraud the boy. She gets her father outside the place and tells him what she has learned. He returns inside and forces himself into the poker game for the purpose of protecting the boy, but finally sees that it is hopeless. Returning home to tell his daughter of his failure he finds the mother there. He tells her where her boy is. The two women wait in the outside hallway while Saunders goes to the door of the anteroom and asks to speak to the boy outside. The proprietor answers the knock and abuses Saunders, telling him not to interrupt the game. The boy has just pledged his claim as the stake in a pot where the cards have been stacked against him. In the hallway the mother hears the argument between Saunders and the proprietor and recognizes the voice. She goes to the door and confronts the gambler, who recognizes her instantly as his wife. She tells him that he is plotting to ruin his own son. Without a word he steps back into the room, throws all the money on the table into a valise, puts it into the boy's hands and pushes him into the hall. The gamblers attempt to follow the boy and take the money, but the father stands with his back to the door, draws a pistol and shoots out the light. In the darkness two shots flash. When a match is lighted its glare shows the upturned face of the proprietor stretched dead across the table.

BEFORE THE LAST LEAVES FALL (Dec. 30).—Tom Stone, angered at his old father's miserly habits, leaves home in a fit of rage. He does not realize that, despite the old man's crabbed ways, he loves him; nor does he appreciate the fact that he himself is loved by Evelyn Gray. Silas Stone is failing fast, and is tenderly cared for by Evelyn. Upon Tom's departure, Silas makes a will, by which all his property goes to Tom, providing the boy returns repentant before the last leaves fall from a tree close beside the old man's window. The will is sealed, and is to be opened on the last day of the year, or when all the leaves have fallen. In case Tom fails to comply with the condition, Evelyn is to inherit everything. Evelyn is aware of the terms of the will, but no other person. Tom, working in distant harvest fields, feels his heart soften toward his father, and starts home.

Meanwhile, Silas has died, and Tom returns to find the old house empty. During the night a great storm arises. Evelyn awakens, and, not knowing of Tom's return, thinks that all chance of his coming into possession of his father's wealth will be gone before dawn. The storm will beat the few remaining leaves from the tree. She steals out into the night, and climbing into the swaying tree ties a dozen leaves securely to their twigs. Tom, awakened by the storm, sees the girl, buffeted by the wind and drenched by rain, her presence disclosed by vivid lightning flashes, but so strange and improbable is the picture that he sets it all down as a vision of his weary brain. The next day he learns that Evelyn has been stricken with pneumonia, and is puzzled and bewildered. Tom proves a constant friend during Evelyn's illness and convalescence, and love claims him for its own. Comes finally the last day of the year and old Silas' will is read. As soon as Tom hears the strange conditions, he examines the leaves that still cling to the tree beside the old house. He now realizes what he saw was no vision and that it was the exposure to the storm which brought about her so nearly fatal illness. He can only swear in his heart to make himself worthy of this girl's great love by a lifetime of devotion.

MANUFACTURING PEARL BUTTONS (Jan. 1).—The pearl button is a small article but, like the pin, it has to go through many hands before it is salable at the notion counter. First we see the oyster shell, which is far from a thing of beauty, and used to be employed in mending roads. The shells are assorted according to value, and then commences the work: cutting, drilling, turning, sizing, polishing and carding. The lathes and drills work rapidly, turning out millions of the discs almost faster than one can count.

THE INSPECTOR'S STORY (Special—2 parts—Jan. 1).—Jim Sloane, an ironworker, who has lost his job through intemperate habits, leaves his wife in a dying condition, and continues his protracted spree. Finding her end near, Mrs. Sloane sends her daughter, Nell, a child of eight years, to search for her father and bring him home that she may bid him a last farewell. After searching through many dives and barrooms in vain, she hears a shot through a dive doorway, and entering, finds that her father has just shot a man to death in a quarrel. The police make an arrest at once, and Nell follows the curious crowd to the police station, where, after a tearful interview with the inspector, she induces him to take her unfortunate father to the bedside of his dying wife, where the final farewells are said.

On the trial Sloane receives a life sentence, and, having taken a deep interest in Nell, the inspector assists her in conducting a newspaper route, instructing his men to protect her from arrest by the Children's Society. One day, meeting her friend, the inspector, in Central Park, Nell asks him how pardons are secured, and, for reply, the inspector points to a lady riding in a carriage, and replies that she could give the information better than anyone else, as she is the governor's wife. Nell follows the carriage to a nearby residence, succeeds in awakening the interest of the lady in the case, and with the friendly inspector as attorney, Nell succeeds in securing the governor's signature to a pardon, and Sloane is released. Backed by the kindly inspector, father and daughter open a newsstand, which in due time is paid for, and a clean bill of sale handed over to the happy principals.

A CORNER IN POPULARITY (Jan. 2).—Jones, a well-to-do business man, sends his wife and daughter, Mabel, to a hotel at Faraway Beach, while he remains at his office in the city. Men are scarce at the seaside hotel, and Mabel, a newcomer, knows no one, and all the available young men are taken by the girls who have arrived before her. Heartsick, Mabel writes her father of the circumstances. Jones is at a loss to know what to do until he spies an advertisement by a professional escort agency, and loses no time in making arrangements for the relief of his daughter's distress.

The next day there is something doing at the beach. A box of roses marked, "From Jack," arrives at the hotel and the messenger boy takes care that everyone on the veranda shall know that they are for Mabel. Soon following, a clean-cut young fellow appears before the hotel, mounted on a handsome horse, and leading another horse. He invites Mabel to a ride, which she accepts, the guests looking on in envy. Later in the afternoon, a box of candy arrives for Mabel, following which another nice-appearing young man arrives with a high-powered auto, in which he invites Mabel for a ride. By this time all the young men guests at the hotel have begun to open their eyes, especially next day, when another young man appears in natty yachting clothes and takes Mabel for a sail. Thereafter, Mabel holds the center of the hotel limelight. A few weeks later Jones takes a run down to the beach. He finds a voting contest going on at the hotel, with a prize of $500 hung up for the most popular girl at the resort. His daughter's name heads the list. There are slight fluctuations, but Mabel wins out in the end. Jones then finds that after subtracting his bill from the escort agency, from the amount of Mabel's prize, he has made a neat profit.

THE MISSING DIAMOND (Jan. 2).—Jacob Levi, an absent minded diamond merchant, visits the home of Isaac Blum. While at dinner, Levi shows Blum a very valuable diamond. In a hurry Levi departs, forgetting the diamond. Blum finds the gem, and decides to keep it. Levi discovers his loss and returns to the house. Mrs. Blum hears a knock at the door and surmises that it is Levi, she drops the diamond in the soup. While the Blums are arguing at the front door with Levi, young Jacob Blum comes into the kitchen, starts to eat some soup, finds the diamond, and takes it out with which to play marbles.

Blum returns to his dinner and not knowing where his wife has placed the stone, he finishes the soup. Levi suspects the Blums and he leaves for the police station. Mrs. Blum returns to the kitchen, and seeing her husband has finished the soup, thinks he has swallowed the diamond. A doctor is called, and he agrees to get the diamond out of Blum's system providing the gem is assigned to him. The Blums agree to this and the doctor is about to cut Blum open when Levi returns with the cops and the Blums and the doctor are arrested. On the way to the station house they meet Jacob shooting marbles with the diamond. The stone is returned to its owner, and Mrs. and Mr. Blum realize that honesty is the best policy.

THE CIRCLE'S END (Jan. 3).—Mary, the daughter of Sheriff Butts, is the telegrapher at Loneville Station. Her sweetheart, Tom Gaynor, and she have had a quarrel because he has gone across the desert on a mission, the reason of which he will not explain. What he did go for is an engagement ring. Mary gets a telegram for her father, advising him to apprehend Tom Gaynor, as evidence in a recent train hold-up points to him. Mary, torn between love and duty, hides the telegram in her dress and wanders off in a sort of daze. She runs across the real fugitives dividing the loot and hastens home for her father. She finds he has gone to town, and, finding an old pair of bracelets and a revolver, goes herself to capture the outlaws. She gets the drop on the bandits and handcuffs one to the other. They trick her, and wrenching the gun from her, leave her unconscious and get away with the loot, still handcuffed to each other. Later the sheriff finds his daughter delirious, and takes her home. Then he finds the telegram in her bodice and is on the lookout for Tom. The fugitives get lost in the desert and are unable to free themselves. They fight and one kills the other, then drags him along until he finds a stone and breaks the handcuffs. A sand storm comes up, and in the midst of it the bandit struggles on, led by a vision of his dead companion linked to his wrist. Exhausted and dying, he at last finds himself back beside the body of the dead man, and finds himself strongly bound to him. He dies trying to place the loot back in the other's hands, Tom, returning, finds them there, and taking the loot, goes to see Mary. There the sheriff apprehends him with the evidence upon him. Tom cannot explain other than that he found it in the desert, which is not believed. Tom's voice brings Mary back to consciousness, and everything is explained, even to the ring. That is slipped upon her finger with a lover's kiss.

HER FACE WAS HER FORTUNE (Dec. 29).—Mr. Wood B. Wedd decided to be married. Accordingly, he purchased a large bouquet of flowers and sallied forth in quest of a wife. First he called on Miss Molly Darling, who laughed heartily at his request and Wood B. seized his flowers and left indignantly. A chance meeting with Widow Connor convinced Wood B. that beauty was after all fickle and frail and that what he really wanted was a good, sensible sort of wife. But the Widow Connor proved to be just as much unimpressed as Molly had been, and an unexpected unwillingness on her part to part with the bouquet resulted in reducing Wedd's share to a few crushed flowers.

Nor was Wood B. more fortunate in his addresses to the strong minded Samantha Perkins or to the demure Lotta Waite. At last, on the very brink of despair he was confronted by his friend Darby Jenks, who showed him an advertisement wherein a young lady, under thirty, who possessed the attractive amount of fifty thousand dollars, expressed her desire to enter into communication with a prospective husband.

Wood B., overjoyed, wrote to the lovely heiress, enclosing a photograph of himself. Receiving a favorable reply, he borrowed carfare from the faithful albeit somewhat reluctant Darby, and set out for the home of his adored in distant California. Arrived in San Michael he hastened to the home of his intended. She was waiting for him in her drawing-room with her back turned toward the door. Wood B. entered and began his carefully prepared little speech. In the outlet of it the lady turned with a glad smile on her handsome face. It really was a handsome face, but all the same Wood B. sprang to his feet and fled with a low howl. His adored was the Bearded Lady in a circus.

THE MYSTERY OF THE DOVER EXPRESS (Dec. 30).—Scarlett, personal representative of Bertrucci, the great diamond merchant, called on Police Superintendent Narkom, and begged for his help. He had to carry a small consignment of peculiarly valuable diamonds to a distant city. Narkom disguised Scarlett in a great beard and green goggles, and arranged that he should meet two detectives and travel with them on the train that afternoon. Then Scarlett, still very nervous, went to call on his fiancee.

When the train left that afternoon the diamonds were carefully hidden in the sole of the boot of the disguised man. Narkom and the manager came down to see them off. At just about this time, Cleek, the great private detective, strolling through the park with his assistant, Dollops, came upon the unconscious body of a man. While his companion was sending for an ambulance, Cleek closely examined a little piece of false beard which was sticking to the man's face. At the superintendent's office Narkom informed Cleek of the steps which had been taken to insure the safety of the diamond merchant. Despite all the precautions, they had been outwitted. Shortly after leaving a station, one of the detectives had looked up from the card game he had been playing and had discovered that the man in disguise had been stabbed to the heart, and that the door of the compartment was unlocked. Cleek immediately rushed down to the scene, and, remembering his experience of the morning, soon succeeded in solving the mystery and arresting the guilty party. It is enough of a suggestion of the interesting features of this story to say that Scarlett was not stabbed at all, and that the man who stabbed the disguised man in the train was apparently the guard on the train. We shall have to leave it to Cleek's clever head to show you to what result the connection between these things led.

ANDY GETS A JOB (Dec. 31).—When Andy learned that his family was in serious danger of losing their home he instantly decided that even at the price of foregoing the pleasures of school he must do something to help. Andy's mother was a washerwoman. The rent was due and the agent had impolitely and firmly intimated that the family must either pay or get out. Andy was not a polite, well-mannered little boy who lay awake at night and wept because his dear mamma was in sorrow. Instead, Andy was something of a tough. He wanted to be a pugilist when he grew up and would not have cared at all to be a curate or anything of that sort. When he learned that the family needed money he decided to leave school and start in business. In consideration of Andy's exact attitude toward school his decision could hardly have been called entirely self-sacrificing.

Andy first applied to the foreman of a large construction gang and learned that they were only in need of large and powerful men. Andy attempted to show the foreman that he was a large and powerful man, but without much success. A little later he tried to join a theatrical company, but failed to convince the stage director of his dramatic ability. Finally Andy went to a district messenger office and interviewed the manager. The manager offered to engage him, but when Andy asked for an advance of ten dollars, the manager curtly refused and poor Andy was in a quandary. It was half past four and unless he had ten dollars by five his mother would be thrown into the street. So he went out and sat on the curb dejectedly. While he sat there, the superintendent of the messenger office came out. As he passed Andy a pocketbook slipped out of his pocket. Andy picked it up. It was very fat and Andy caught a glimpse of large and beautiful yellow bills. For just half a minute he thought of rushing home with his find. Then he turned and ran for the man. That was the way that Andy got his job and an advance of ten dollars. He reached home just as the agent was piling the furniture in the street. Andy haughtily paid the tyrant and stalked into the welcoming arms of his proud family.

THE ANTIQUE BROOCH (Special—2 parts—Jan. 2).—Jack Morley had never allowed financial matters or anything else to worry him very much, until one unfortunate morning when a curt letter from his uncle informed him not only that his allowance would be discontinued, but that he would be cut off with a shilling in his uncle's will as well, unless a speedy change was noticeable in his habits. Filled with a healthy spirit of remorse, Morley went out to a week end at Shirley Towers to ponder over this latest development in his affairs. At Shirley Towers, Morley ran across an old acquaintance in the person of Veronica Shirley, a niece of Lord Shirley's. Veronica and Morley had played together as children, and a very few moments of conversation served to put them back on their old terms of cheerful friendship. Morley learned that Veronica's father had died, and that the young girl was at her wits' edds to meet the numerous debts he had left.

That evening, Lord Shirley showed the company a wonderfully valuable brooch he had purchased some time before at an auction sale. Later that evening, Lord Shirley curtly refused to help Veronica with her father's debts. Still later, Veronica coming downstairs to find a missing glove, saw a screen moved quickly across the drawing room to the door, screening the identity of some unknown person behind it. When the family and guests rushed into the room after her scream of alarm, it was found that the safe had been opened and the brooch stolen. On the strength of circumstantial evidence, Veronica was accused of the theft. Morley, convinced of her guilt, none the less sacrificed himself to save her. He admitted that he had stolen the brooch, and promised to get it back from the confederate outside the house to whom, he said, he had given it.

As a matter of fact, there had been somebody looking outside the house at the time of the robbery. Big Dan had come up from London with the sole purpose of stealing the famous brooch. Through the window he had seen the mysterious person behind the screen. The mystery was cleared up the next day on the railroad train, after an exciting fight between Morley and Big Dan had culminated in the latter falling from the train. It is enough to say that neither Veronica nor Morley were implicated, that we leave them with every assurance of a happy future.

STANTON'S LAST FLING (Jan. 3).—When John Parker died suddenly of apoplexy, Vincent Stanton, his partner, discovered that the dead man had been misappropriating the funds of the firm for some time past and that nearly all his own carefully saved fortune must be sacrificed to save the honor of the firm. His first impulse on learning that he was ruined was to end everything with a revolver. On second thought he decided to have one last fling on the continent with the little he had left before putting an end to an unbearable existence. On the train to Dover Stanton found himself in the same apartment with a wonderfully beautiful girl and a man, evidently a French nobleman. Stanton looked the pair over with some curiosity and then put them out of his mind altogether until the next evening when he looked up from the roulette table at Biarritz and saw the Frenchman seated directly opposite him. The men nodded to each other in recognition and after the play had stopped, entered into a conversation which ended in the Frenchman, who introduced himself as the Chevalier de Maupert, inviting Stanton to dinner at his chateau.

After dinner as Stanton waited for his cab, a note was thrown to him from an upper window of the chateau. It was from the girl he had seen on the train and boat, Lady Angela Carruthers. Believing that the Chevalier loved her for herself alone, she had fled with him from England to be married to him when they reached his chateau. After her arrival the Chevalier informed her that she must give him a marriage settlement of one hunded thousand pounds. When she refused, he locked her in her room, informing her that the next day he would take her to his Ardennes estate, where she would soon find she would not be able to withstand his will. Stanton, learning of his pretty countrywoman's danger, took the first step toward her rescue by bribing the Chevalier's chauffeur. The next morning when the Chevalier started on his long journey with Angela, the car unaccountably broke down before a wayside inn. Stanton arriving a few moments later, took the girl in his car and rushed on down the road pursued by the vengeful Chevalier. An exciting chase followed which was finally terminated by a providential drawbridge which stopped the Chevalier while Stanton and the girl continued on their way to England and happiness.

THE STOLEN HEART (Dec. 30).—The sensation of a grand masquerade ball is a stunning girl, costumed in black, who wears a peculiar ornament on her breast a flaming red heart. Jack Harrington, who has the reputation of a heart-breaker, tries his best to make an impression and lays a wager with a number of club men that he will get the heart and determine the identity of "the girl in black." Happily for the frustrating of his scheme, a busy little boy tells the veiled lady, so that she is armed for the adventure. When daring Jack invites her to use his automobile going home, she declines, but when the midnight hour sounds, she slips out to her own waiting auto and he follows in his own machine. The machine stops at her house, and she and an elderly escort enter. Jack has a feeling that the man may be her father, but he feels that he must bring back the heart or earn the everlasting ridicule of all his friends.

The girls in the house are soon alive to the fact that the automobile dropped a man in the grounds. Bessie tells them the story of the young man, the bet, and the desire for the heart that adorns her breast. Instead of becoming frightened at the idea of a man in the garden below, she tells them that she has no fear of a burglar and will handle the guest herself. When Jack sees the light extinguished in the room, he climbs a heavy trellis supporting a vine that reaches directly to her window. He enters and tiptoes about the shadowy room in search of the ornament. He sees the heart, slips it in his pocket, together with her picture. Just then a sound from the adjoining room frightens him, and he slips into a dressing cabinet. A real burglar comes through the window, wearing a mask. The beauty, who is awake, covers him with a revolver, and in a low voice orders him to obey her directions or she will shoot. She tells him to put on a dressing gown, and explains that it is a joke on somebody. Jack, thinking the coast is clear, comes out, and the girl switches on the light. She tells him that she will call for her husband. Panic stricken, he makes a dash for the window and falls out headlong. Just then the real burglar emerges from concealment. Jack has been captured by two policemen and brought back, and is denounced by the real burglar as the culprit. The police search him and he is made to restore the heart and the picture. But Jack finally pleads with the girl and obtains her forgiveness.

FATHER'S DAY (Dec. 31).—A sturdy old farmer is grieved over the fact that his son, Absolom, has forsaken him. Mercy, the hired girl, brings him a newspaper in which they read about the celebration of "Father's Day," and pray that the hard heart of the boy may be softened. In dissolves, is shown why Absolom left the farm—because of his violent temper and his cruelty of the dumb animals about the place. Then is shown the young man himself, a chauffeur in the city, to the daughter of a wealthy broker. She is shopping in the street, which commemorates "Father's Day"—buys flowers and pennants for her own father, and then begs Absolom to send something to his father. He is obdurate, and she determines to redeem him from his selfishness. She makes him drive to the farm, gets the old farmer, and throwing aside class distinction, takes him to see vaudeville, to wrestle with Chop Suey, and raises his hair shooting the Chutes. Absolom is "cut out" of all these entertainments in order to humiliate him, and eventually he is shown in her home in the servants' hall, while the father he has derided fares on champagne and oysters in the grand dining-room.

When all get back to the farm by way of the car, the father tries to induce Absolom to give up his job and come back home. The beauteous Hilda then takes a hand, advises him it is his duty to return home and discharges him on the spot. This brings him to a realizing sense of duty and he accepts the situation in justice to himself and all concerned, settles down happily, joyous in the smiles of Mercy, the country lass, to milk the cows and follow the plow.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS (Jan. 1).—Captain Ellsmere, of the Twenty-first Lancers receives a Victoria Cross for bravery in action, but the same recklessness that prompted deeds of valor led him to be reckless in other ways, and his escapades soon become a byword and reproach in army circles, so that he is forced to resign. He goes away into the Canadian Northwest. Happily he harms no one but himself, but drops lower and lower in the social scale as a habitue of low saloons. However, one day in a restaurant his manhood flares up when a gambler insults a waitress. He forces the gambler to apologize, makes an enemy of him and makes a stanch friend of the little girl. In the altercation the Victoria Cross is dropped and the waitress, Mary Loveridge, picks it up and afterward learns his identity. Later, through her good offices, when he is not himself, she saves him from probable death at the hands of a number of his dance-hall acquaintances. Finally she prevails upon him to stop drinking, induces him to turn over a new leaf, and he goes to look for work. On the way he stops a runaway team and rescues the daughter of a rich mine owner. When he drives back to the mine he receives the thanks of her father, and is given a position, which he fills to the satisfaction of his employer.

A sensational episode follows when the girl, Ruth Graham, decides to go down in the mines, but she is subsequently forced to change her plans, as the cage is loaded with explosives. The girl, having given up one thing, finds another thing to do, and goes out shooting coyotes. In the interim, a fire breaks out in the mine and all is excitement above ground, as the owner thinks his beloved daughter is down in the burning shaft. The cage is blown up by the explosive, and the entire working superstructure of the mine is shattered. Dick had early rushed to the rescue and gone down the burning shaft. He is tossed back to earth again by the force of the explosion and Ruth returns to discover that he has once more risked his life to save her.

The little waitress, in the meantime, has seen a cable message in a local paper to the effect that Dick's father has died and he is now the possessor of a title, and a search is being made to ascertain his whereabouts. Dick has been cared for at the home of the mine owner most solicitously by the wealthy girl, who has formed an affection for him. However, when Mary Loveridge, the little waitress, comes with the news, he rallies and recognizes her. It was she who regenerated him and it is she who is the woman of his heart. He proposes to her instanter, but she gently waves him away, as her heart was given to another. In fact, she is a married woman, working to defray the expense of an invalid husband, who has recovered, and she now leaves the West to join him. Her influence on Dick's life is lasting; his old friends try to win him back, but he has forsworn whisky and its accompaniments and he feels himself worthy to once again wear the Victoria Cross.

AT CROSS PURPOSES (Jan. 2).—Richard Holden, a well known athlete and club man, is much impressed by the latest novel of Katherine Lewis, so much so that he writes to her, asking her for a photograph. This distinguished lady is bored with a flood of letters from unknown admirers, but she immediately recognizes Holden as the captain of a fashionable polo team (having seen his picture in the newspapers), and decides in a spirit of mischief, to respond. She mails him a photograph of her maid, Jane Binns, a homely soinster of uncertain age, and signs her own name on the picture. When Holden receives this photograph his interest in Katherine Lewis ceases instantly.

Later, by chance, they happen to be guests at the same hotel. In the interim Jane Binns' face gives Holden a pain every time he thinks of it, but the frolicsome author, in order to keep up the illusion, insists upon Jane impersonating herself while she assumes the position of the maid. They meet from time to time, and one day are chased by a vicious bulldog and are obliged to climb a tree to escape his affections. This tree is only a few feet from a well and Holden conceives the happy idea of taking off his coat, and dangling the sleeve down in the muzzle of the infuriated growler. When the dog fastens on the coat, he swings him clear off the ground like a pendulum and drops him into the well. Later, the owner of the dog rescues him, but as Katherine and Holden are walking back to the hotel, they meet honest Jane Binns, who tells him the truth and refuses to continue the deception longer. Holden does not appear to be bothered a bit about the revelation, but likes it.

BUSTER AND SUNSHINE (Jan. 2).—A charming comedy of a boy and girl, children of a widow and widower, who become playmates and make a match between their parents. Guileless youth showing the way to knowing age.

THE WOLF OF THE CITY (Special—2 parts—Dec. 15).—Mark Haggarty, a police reporter, is known as "the wolf of the city" by reason of his pen. At the police station he manages to photograph Stanley Vandon, a fashionable society man, who has been speeding in his auto with an adventuress, Mme. Verdane. The city editor of the paper sees a big scoop in Haggarty's article. The reporter takes the photograph to Vandon's apartment and shows it to the wife, who, while admitting that they are alienated, believes that she can win back her husband, and begs the reporter not to publish the photo. As she is talking with him the sleeve of her garment blows back, disclosing bruises that have been made by her husband. This determines the good-natured reporter not to print the photo, and as he is leaving the apartment to go to the drawing room to call up the city editor, the wife falls into the arms of her maid, fainting from excitement.

After conversing with the city editor and refusing to write up the affair, Haggarty meets Vandon, who has returned home. He offers Haggarty a large sum of money to keep the affair from the eyes of

He is a "beaver" for work and his daughter emulates his example, and when the suitors call, she "tries them out" by putting them on the woodpile. Then happens along a slick, but lazy individual in dudish attire, who manages to live without work. Old man Briggs is simply dying for a smoke. THE OPEN DOOR (Special—2 parts—Dec. 22).—His beloved wife having died, Mark Boland sells his furniture and seeks to forget his sorrow in dissipation. He comes in contact with David Yarnall, a man who has been discharged from the employ of Jim Driscoll, a prosperous Quaker, for his dissolute habits. Yarnall persuades Boland to help him rob the home of Driscoll. Boland does not realize the enormity of what he is about to do until he is inside, when he begins to sob like a child. Becoming alarmed, Yarnall tries to escape, but is nabbed by a policeman who happens to be near by. The noise awakens Driscoll, who goes to the library and finds Boland, who tells his story so pathetically and truthfully that the Quaker decides to give Boland a position. One day Boland is sent on an errand, and Howard, the young son of Driscoll, who has always been very fond of Boland, follows him and becomes lost in a railroad yard. He is in danger of being killed when a tramp picks him up and places him in a freight car. The tramp is unable to get out of the way of the oncoming train and is killed. Before the boy has had time to realize where he is a trainman locks the door of the car in which he is and he is taken to a distant city, where a policeman, noting his weakened condition, takes him to a hospital. He is then taken to an orphan asylum. His condition deprives him of his memory and he does not even recall his name. In the meantime his father and mother are living a life of sorrow.

Time flies and little Howard, now a boy of eighteen years, has found a home with Silas Sowers, a farmer, who ill treats him. He is given enough money by a man on the farm, with which to pay his carfare to another city. By a singular coincidence he arrives in his home town. Being of a studious turn of mind, Boland goes to the library when Driscoll and his wife have gone to attend a Quaker yearly meeting. He absentmindedly leaves his purse, with his card in it, on the reading table, after he has made a few notes. By a peculiar direction of Fate it is picked up by Howard, who returns it. Feeling sorry for the condition of the young man, Boland invites him into the library for refreshments. His memory comes back to him when he looks through the door, which has always been kept ajar, and sees on the wall a picture of his face when a baby, the picture being identical with the one he had received from the orphan asylum when he left. He proclaims his identity. A happy reconciliation takes place when his father and mother arrive home.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (Dec. 29).—Against her parents' wishes, Margaret Craig becomes engaged to Fred. He goes West to join his friend, Dick, a successful rancher. He allows his weakness for drink to ruin him. Not knowing of Fred's degeneracy, Margaret persuades her parents to allow her to join him, at his request. In the West, she and Fred are married. She meets his friend Dick and they establish a mutual but legitimate interest in each other. He presents her with a fine horse.

Her husband's pal, Pete, with whom Fred drinks and gambles, is kindly treated by Margaret, for she recognizes the fellow as a weakling dominated by Fred. In a drunken quarrel over cards Fred abuses Pete. Margaret interferes and gets Pete out of the cabin. Fred strikes her. She mounts the horse Dick gave her and the animal takes her to its former master. Dick attends to her wounds. They both realize that she must return to her husband and Dick brings her back. In the meantime, while Pete, having seen Margaret pass with her face bleeding, hastens to Fred's cabin. Fred murderously attacks Pete. In the fight Pete kills Fred in self-defense.

When Margaret and Dick arrive, Dick goes into the cabin and finds Fred lying dead upon the floor. There is a note stuck in his belt, left by Pete, saying he killed Fred and has gone to give himself up to the sheriff. Dick takes the note and goes out to Margaret. He shows her the note and when she reads it she falls backward into his arms in a dead faint. Dick reverently feels he must give her his protection and counsel in the hour of her distress.

HIS SECOND WIFE (Dec. 30).—Jack Gordon, a wealthy young widower, announces at a gay dinner party that by the advice of his doctor he must go to his country place for a rest. They try to dissuade him from leaving, but he is determined. Not even the entreaties of Flossie, a very attractive young woman, will change his resolve. Gordon leaves his little daughter, Ethel, with his aunt and takes his departure.

While out riding one clear winter day, Jack picks up a little girl who has fallen and hurt her knee just as she was coming from the schoolhouse, and he carries her home on his horse. Ellice, the beautiful young school teacher, accompanies the child home. The next day, Jack, riding in his speedy auto meets Ellice and takes her for a ride. As they are going through a woodland road the machine breaks down. A terrific snowstorm forces them to seek shelter in a nearby hunting lodge belonging to Gordon.

Ellice is full of fear at being alone with a comparative stranger, and finding that the telephone is out of order, she rushes alone into the storm. She is driven here and there by the merciless wind and is almost frozen to death when she finally comes back to the lodge and falls down exhausted outside the door. Jack carries her in and after fixing a room for her on the second floor, sends her there to rest. On the following day the villagers criticise her so much that Jack impulsively marries her to give her the protection of his name, but he finds her efforts to please a source of irritation, and showing it, causes her to treat him with disdain. Her indifferent attitude now leads him to fall desperately in love with her; and when Flossie, his former associate of the gay, reckless days, calls upon him, he dismisses her curtly. At first Ellice will not harken to his love. It is only through the medium of little Ethel, that she finally surrenders herself to the anxious heart of the man she loves.

THE BABY SHOW (Dec. 30).—A concise idea of the proper care of babies necessary to their hygienic growth and development.

THE EDUCATION OF AUNT GEORGIANA (Dec. 31).—A very wealthy old lady, Mrs. Black, living with her grandnephew, Harry, whom she rules with a rod of iron, invites Phyllis Perry, her grandniece, to spend two weeks with her. Phyllis being a very headstrong girl, and not liking her aunt's tyrannical ruling, at first refuses the invitation, but later, under her mother's persuasion, consents to go. When she arrives, she is amused at Harry, who is made to dress in stiff and semi-puritanical fashion. She shocks her aunt by practising calisthenics in a gymnasium, getting Harry to dress in up-to-date clothes, falling to sleep when Harry is reading and generally misbehaving herself.

Phyllis takes a fancy to Harry, who falls desperately in love with her. She sets to work to make a man of him, telling him that he must have a will of his own if he is ever going to amount to anything. She teaches him to dance and they go in secret to a hop at the boathouse.

Mrs. Black discovers their absence and sits up all night to catch them. When they come home in the early morning and she upbraids Phyllis, Harry rebels and tells her that he will not live under her tyranny any longer, but will go out into the world to shift for himself. He leaves the house that very night. Mrs. Black locks Phyllis in her room, fearing she will follow him. A burglar breaks into Mrs. Black's room, terrifying her with a revolver, and is about to rob her when Phyllis, who has seen him enter, but cannot get out of her room, climbs down the vines to the veranda, gets into Mrs. Black's room, and holds up the burglar till help can be summoned. Mrs. Black becomes convinced that there is good in her self-willed niece and she takes her into her arms and consents to her marriage with Harry.

THE SECRET OF THE BULB (Jan. 1).—Disapproving of her son's affections for the nurse, Miss Martin, Mrs. Richards loses no opportunity to tell her son, Jack, what she thinks of it. Miss Martin receives a letter from her brother asking for money to get him out of a scrape. She puts the letter in a book she is reading. Not long afterwards, Mrs. Richards misses a ring which her little daughter Nellie has mischievously taken and lost. The ring accidentally slips from her finger while she is digging her hand in the dirt of a flower pot. Mrs. Richards while looking for the ring, knocks the book which Miss Martin was reading off the table and finds the letter from the nurse's brother. She now puts two and two together and comes to the conclusion that Miss Martin took the ring to raise funds for her brother. She calls the girl and dismisses her on the spot without even giving her a chance to defend herself. Miss Martin goes back to nursing again at the big hospital.

Later, when the bulb which was placed in the flower pot in which little Nellie was digging sends out its shoots, it carries the hidden ring to the surface and when Mrs. Richards goes through the conservatory on a tour of inspection she discovers it. Nellie happens to run by at the time and from her guilty look it is easily seen that she is responsible for the ring in the pot. Mrs. Richards is very sorry now for what she has done and she tells her son. He upbraids her for her injustice and tells her he will not speak to her again until Miss Martin has been found and exonerated. He goes to a detective agency to start a search for the girl and while there is wounded by the accidental discharge of a revolver.

He is taken to the hospital. His mother comes to see him but he will not speak to her. His mother leaves him and while on her way out meets Miss Martin. She finally prevails upon her to go in to see Jack. A happy reunion follows in which the two lovers are reunited and a mother is forgiven.

THE MISADVENTURES OF A MIGHTY MONARCH (Jan. 2).—Bunny is waited upon by the Mardi Gras committee who tell him he has been elected King of the Festival. He is shown a photograph of his Queen Lillian. Mrs. Flora, Bunny's wife, suspicious that her spouse has not requested the committee to elect her as his consort, follows John to Lillian's home, where he has gone with the committee, who are insistent that he be immediately presented to his Queen. Wallie, as Lillian's suitor, strenuously objects to her assuming royal honors. The lovers quarrel, and Wallie leaves the house in a rage. John in pacifying Lillian is surprised by Flora, who, in a rage of jealousy leads her better half by the ear.

When John's royal wardrobe is shipped him, Flora greatly enraged, hurls the regal garments out of the window. On the night of the Coronation, Flora furiously watches the procession from her window, and her fury knows no bounds as she observes the fair Lillian enthroned next to her husband.

When the doughty king returns a little the worse for the revelries of the evening, with his crown cocked ingloriously on one side of his head, he finds himself locked out. He wanders about the streets and is held up by an inebriate tramp, who makes him exchange clothes with him. John is arrested as a vagabond and taken to the station house. His appeals over the phone to his wife asking her to come and bail him out are of no avail, until he threatens to call up Lillian and ask her. At this Flora bangs down the receiver. John thinks of Wallie and phones him, and gets him out of bed at an unholy hour. He makes use of the same threat against Wallie, who, although he furiously refuses to aid his arch enemy, on the quiet, makes his way to the station house. Bunny calls up Lillian, who promises to come to him at once. Flora appears at the police station with the drunken tramp whom she has met and captured, with the assistance of a policeman. All ends happily when Flora sees Lillian and Wallie in each other's arms, for she is convinced that she has been hasty and foolish and she handsomely forgives her liege lord.

THE STREET SINGER (Special—2 parts—Jan. 3).—Wallie is the son of a rich man who disapproves of his son's attentions to Betty, a street singer and dancer, the daughter of an organ grinder. The organ grinder thoroughly disapproves of the idle rich, gives his daughter his views on the matter and orders her to keep the upstart away from her in the future. Disobeying his commands, Betty marries Wallie, and they elope to Chicago. Poverty faces them, when Betty suggests that they become street singers. Wallie's father loses his fortune and Wallie at once returns to New York to befriend him. They are reunited, the old man received his daughter-in-law with open arms. Betty's father unable to earn his living without Betty as an attraction wanders away into a different part of the city and they cannot locate him. A New Year's Eve celebration is being planned by some New York club man. Wishing to have something unusual, they secure Wallie and his wife to appear at the entertainment in their original role of street singers. The attention of the president of the Vitagraph Company of America is attracted to Wallie and Betty. He offers them a chance to appear in his company. Later Betty's father, now a peanut vender, bitterly regretting the separation from his daughter, sees their picture in a motion picture theater and calls at the Vitagraph Studio as they are rehearsing a scene. He is so glad to see his beloved daughter that he quickly forgives her and her husband for having taken her from him. He clasps his daughter in his arms and extends a friendly hand to her husband.

THE GHOST OF SELF (Dec. 30).—Frank Johnson, a wealthy landlord, without a heart, has no mercy for the poor. His cold attitude towards the public in general has a great influence in his life, and when he proposes marriage to Eleanor Groves, his manner is indeed anything but that of love. Eleanor, although she cares for Johnson—reprimands him and tells him that she could never marry a man as cruel as he is. Her last line of rebuff—"The ghost of your better self will appear to you and make you realize what a beast you are," sets Johnson to thinking. The inner man takes possession and he realizes what an ingrate he has been. Poor people are restored to their humble quarters and Johnson returns to his sweetheart a MAN.

WHEN LOVE IS YOUNG (Dec. 31).—Tom and Dick, young boys of the country, are chums. Their sorrows and joys are shared—what belongs to one belongs to the other. One beautiful summer morn, Eleanor, a pretty young miss from the city, comes to the small town to visit a relative. Tom and Dick cease to be friends—jealousy coming between the two lads. They each try to outwit the other. Their surprise is genuine, however, when Eleanor's "regular feller" from the city comes to take her home, with her mother. The boys are heartbroken. They soon forget about the girl and drown their sorrows in an ice cream soda.

ASCENDING SUGAR LOAF MOUNTAIN (Dec. 31).—This is a scenic travelogue showing the ascension of Sugar Loaf Mountain, one of Nature's most beautiful masterpieces.

THROUGH TRACKLESS SANDS (Jan. 1).—While on the way to visit her mother, Mrs. Bailey stops to feed the horses. She discovers that the oats had leaked out of the bag and she is compelled to ask assistance of a party camping nearby. During her absence from the buggy, her young daughter strays off into the woods and falls over a high cliff. The rugged rocks and brush hold her tight alongside of the cliff. Mrs. Bailey becomes frantic. Dayton, one of the campers, volunteers to save the child and lowers himself by the aid of a rope. The child is restored to its mother. Dayton later secures a position on Bailey's ranch. Bailey becomes smitten with Dayton's wife and it is only through the recognition of a locket she is wearing that she is saved from the infuriated ranchman. Bailey's daughter had given Mrs. Dayton the locket in appreciation of the brave deed her husband had accomplished. Bailey apologizes to Mrs. Dayton, and her husband, who had been sent on a false errand across the desert, is saved from the jaws of death.

THE REDEMPTION OF BRONCHO BILLY (Jan. 3).—Broncho Billy loses his job and is forced to go West in search of employment. He lands in a small Western town, where he takes up gold mining. Stockdale, a Westerner, also meeting with bad luck, consults Broncho Billy, and the two determine to hold up the stage coach that day. Broncho's wife goes in search of him and is met by Stockdale, who informs her that her husband is in the next town and that the stage is leaving in a very few moments. Stockdale tells Broncho Billy that his wife is on the stage and not to hold it up. Broncho Billy meets his wife at the hotel and there is a happy reunion. He determines to start life anew.

THE AWAKENING AT SNAKEVILLE (Special—2 parts—Jan. 2).—Sophie is making bread and her husband, the slender and much abused "Alkali," is taking a quiet nap inside of an empty barrel. He is dreaming dreams of the just, when he is rudely awakened and sent hurriedly to the grocery store for supplies. In a cabin nearby, Slippery Slim, Mustang Pete and Rawhide Bill are playing a friendly (?) game of poker. Mustang Pete and Rawhide Bill get into an argument over the hands they hold, and seeing "Alkali," determine to get him to settle the question of which hand is the better. "Alkali" Ike takes more time on his errand than is necessary, so Sophie starts out after him with a rolling pin. She has little trouble in locating the "woman hater." Sophie bursts into the cabin—the men nearly scared out of their skins, take to their heels and get under cover, wherever a good hiding place presents itself. "Alkali" Ike is taken by the ear and led to the grocery store, where he gathers his purchases and carries them home. Sophie, satisfied that her husband is wasting his time, puts him to work peeling a few potatoes. A brave attempt to escape is made by way of the nearest window, but fate plays a hand in the game and the window slams down on "Alkali" Ike's ankles, leaving him three-quarters out of the room and a quarter in. Sophie hears the rumpus—with one jerk at "Alkali" Ike's neck she spills him all over the room. "You won't leave this house if I can prevent it," she tells him, and ties a rope round his waist, the other end of which she ties round her wrist. The three friends of "Alkali" sneak cautiously up to his window and whistle for him, but Sophie's ear is much keener than her husband's. Sophie fires a shotgun at the trio. Slippery Slim is the target of her good aim and he hobbles off to the nearest doctor, who happens to be a fakir touring the country. The men purchase some sleeping powders from him, which they later shoot into "Alkali" Ike's room, with the aid of a gun. A note informs the much "henpecked mere man" that by giving some of the powder to Sophie, he will be able to join them in a little game of cards. "Alkali" Ike gets an idea.

Slippery Slim, Rawhide Bill and Mustang Pete are patiently waiting the results of the powders. Sophie sends "Alkali" to the well for some water—he pours some powder into it and offers his darling wife a drink. Does she accept it? No. She pours it into the bread she is making. "Alkali" Ike brings up the cider jug from the cellar and places some of the powder in it, but to his astonishment, when Sophie wants a drink, he discovers that the jug is empty. All this time "Alkali" Ike has been securely tied with the rope, the other end, mind you, attached to Sophie. "Get out of the house this instant—go to the grocery store and get some cider—and be in a HURRY, too," Sophie screams at him. "Alkali" starts on a run, and so fast does he go that he literally pulls her off her feet. "Alkali" Ike goes to the store as fast as his feet can carry him, and poor Sophie, who only weighs about 300 pounds, is dragged after him. They reach the store at last and "Alkali" Ike buys some cider and the remainder of the sleeping powder is poured into the jug. Sophie drinks some of it, and on the way back to her home, she falls asleep and totters to earth. "Alkali" Ike tries to lift her, but alas, she is too heavy. He tries to drag her, but without avail. A brilliant idea. He gets a log nearby and pries her, turning her over and over until she reaches the top of the hill. "We'll get home in a hurry now," he thinks, as he gives her the last push, which would have rolled her home. As Sophie is rolling and bouncing down the hill homeward, "Alkali" Ike stands and watches her. He comes out of his seventh heaven in a hurry, however, when the rope reaches its full length and he is jerked bodily after her. At the bottom of the hill, "Alkali" hitches a burrow to the rope and drags his wife home. Overheated and perspiring, "Alkali" Ike takes a drink of water, then wends his way to the cabin, where the three men are waiting for him. But, alas and aleck, just when he is about to enjoy himself in a quiet game of poker, he falls asleep. Sophie awakens and hurries to the cabin, where the three men are maliciously handled by her. She finds her husband asleep and gently lifts him upon her lap, where she fondles and kisses him, thinking he has been the victim of the three roughnecks she had so completely trimmed a moment before.

Father promises to give them money to start their happy married way, but forgets when a widow, with a little girl, comes home with him as a bride. Then it is that the abandoned well comes into play and father's eyes are opened to his neglect.

THE WEDDING GOWN (Dec. 29).—It was to be a surprise for her little girl when she stood up on her wedding day with faithful Billy. But Aunt Marion in the city believed in broadening out and proceeded to broaden May Belle. A great opportunity appeared in the son of her aunt's most particular friend. There was a lavish trousseau. Mother and Billy waited. They knew May Belle.

SKELLEY'S SKELETON (Jan. 1).—Skelley was a lazy "skate," so lazy that he sold his skeleton while he still walked around in it. It proved a poor bargain. Dr. Druggs pursued his property with a dogged perseverance. "Handle my property with care," he yelled, until poor Skelley could not call his soul his own. Then Professor Presto performed and Skelley, his confederate, disappeared. A skeleton stood in his place while Presto and Druggs settled the matter between them.

GILT EDGE STOCKS (Dec. 22).—The police learn that Fleece has victimized a number of people by selling worthless stocks. Detectives Wallace and West are assigned to the case. The officers secure a room underneath Fleece's office. By installing a vocaphone in the swindler's office they are enabled to overhear all that transpires. Fleece induces Maude, the clerk at the cigar stand in the building, to purchase some of his stocks. Coleman, her sweetheart, urges Maud to demand the return of her money. The girl, however, insists that the stocks are valuable.

Coleman later enters Fleece's office and orders the man to return the money he has mulcted from Maud. The swindler sneers at him and a fight ensues. Coleman is driven from the office at the point of a revolver. The vocaphone transmits the voices of the men to the detectives downstairs.

Meanwhile, Maud learns from a prominent financier that Fleece has robbed her. The girl hastens to the swindler's office and demands her money back. Instead, Fleece seizes her in his arms. Maud struggles. Her hand brushes the revolver lying on the desk. She picks up the weapon. In the struggle the revolver is fired. Fleece falls to the floor.

Coleman hears the shot and learns of what has occurred. He compels Maud to leave the office. Wallace and West have failed to listen to Maud's argument with Fleece, but come running up at the sound of the shot. Coleman stands over Fleece, pistol in hand.

The young man declares that he has shot the man. Maud listens at the door and realizes the sacrifice her lover intends to make. She rushes into the room and declares her guilt. Fleece is dying. With the knowledge that his end is at hand, the man calls the officers to his side and confesses that Maud shot him in self-defense.

THE BIG HORN MASSACRE (Special—2 parts—Dec. 24).—Fleetfoot and Hawkeye fight a terrible duel on horseback for the hand of Willowbud, daughter of Chief Buffalo Face. Fleetfoot is slain. Willowbud, who hates the victor, flees. Hawkeye follows. The girl is rescued by Lieutenant Blake and his men. Foiled, Hawkeye returns to camp and declares that the soldiers have made Willowbud a prisoner. The Indians declare war upon the white men. They make a furious attack upon the fort, only to be repulsed with heavy loss.

Shortly afterward, the Indians learn of the presence of an immigrant train in the Big Horn Valley. Chief Buffalo Face and his men make a sudden attack and massacre the immigrants after a desperate battle. Only two whites escape death—Lee, who dashes away to the post for help, and Vera, his sweetheart, who is captured by Hawkeye. Lee brings news of the slaughter to the fort. Soldiers are dispatched to the scene. Willowbud steals out of the post and hastens to warn her people. The sight of the massacred women and children causes the troopers to register a vow for vengeance.

Blake, who is in command, divides his force so as to take the enemy on two sides. The soldiers descend upon the Indians like a whirlwind. Fighting like demons, the troopers wipe the Indians out. His desire to avenge the death of his people gives Lee superhuman strength. Single-handed he slays Buffalo Face and Hawkeye. Blake discovers Vera a prisoner in Hawkeye's tepee. He frees the girl, who sees her sweetheart standing over the bodies of his foes. She calls him. Lee turns. The lovers rush into each other's arms.

EMANCIPATED WOMEN (Dec. 26).—Jean, Grace and Mabel determine to cast off the shackles of domestic duties and do men's work. The three hire a farm, don overalls and turn their hands to the culture of the soil. The girls advertise for men to do housework, but not a single applicant appears. In desperation, Jean, Mabel and Grace capture Harold, Jack and Jim. The boys are imprisoned in the barn and are informed that they will be released upon promising to do the housework. The prisoners give one glance at their captors—and promptly promise. Within an hour, Jim, Harold and Jack are scrubbing floors, preparing meals, etc.

Meanwhile, the girls discover that farming isn't all that it is cracked up to be. Mabel is soon weeping over a collection of blisters as the result of using a hoe; Jean weeps because her spine feels like a rubber hose, due to bending over the garden truck, while Grace sobs because using a buck-saw has made her arms feel like two billets of wood. Thus the boys find them. Unknown to the others, each proposes marriage. The girls sob their consent. Each couple steals to the minister, arriving at the same moment as the other two. Woman's emancipation is forgotten. The lovers stand before the dominie and, with one accord, promise to assume their peculiar duties.

TALCUM POWDER (Dec. 26).—The dainty tin of talcum powder on milady's dresser has an interesting history. This feature takes the photoplay patron on a tour through mine and mill, which reveals every step of the process which makes possible the use of this indispensable toilet article.

The pictures show the talc mines, three hundred and fifty feet below the surface of the earth. Succeeding scenes show the huge crushers which reduce the talc to a powder, etc.

HER INDIAN BROTHER (Dec. 27).—Big Heart and his sister, Ventra, meet Huntley, a civil engineer, while on their way to the Indian school. The brother conceives a dislike for the white man. Ventra, however, falls in love with him. To deceive Big Heart, Huntley shaves off his beard and courts the girl without her brother's knowledge. A month after the Indians have arrived at the school, the white man induces Ventra to run away with him. Big Heart discovers the elopement the following morning. He follows. For six months the Indian continues the search. He finally discovers Ventra dying of want in a miserable shanty. The maiden has been deserted by her lover. Big Heart discovers the man's picture on the table. He vows to run down his sister's betrayer.

Fate causes Huntley to apply for a position on a construction job near the Hopi reservation—Big Heart's home. There the unscrupulous man sees Fleetfoot. He makes love to the girl. Unknown to Huntley, Fleetfoot is Big Heart's sweetheart. Big Heart returns to his home and learns that a white man is forcing attentions upon Fleetfoot. With one of his tribe the Indian arrives at Fleetfoot's 'dobe in time to overhear his sweetheart's father, a drunkard, sell the girl to Huntley.

The Indian rescues the girl he loves and both flee. Big Heart has recognized Huntley. Huntley pursues the pair until night falls. Big Heart lights a fire to attract the white man's attention. Huntley cautiously makes his way to the camp. The Indian suddenly extinguishes the fire and crouches near by. Huntley approaches the embers, pistol in hand. With a panther-like leap Big Heart is upon his sister's betrayer. A knife flashes twice. Ventra's death is avenged.

A MODERN JEKYLL AND HYDE (Special—2 parts—Dec. 29).—Jethro Smith, regarded as a substantial citizen, is in reality leader of a desperate gang of criminals. No one suspects him of a dual existence—least of all, his daughter, Nora. The man incurs the hatred of Hykes, a member of the gang. Shortly afterward, Hykes, in wandering about the vicinity of the Smith home, holds Nora up and steals her necklace. Roger, who is in love with the girl, comes to the rescue. Hykes escapes. Jethro goes to the gang's rendezvous after changing into rough clothes in a little shack he has rented for that purpose. The leader glances over the loot stolen by the gang. He is electrified to find Nora's locket among the loot Hykes displays. The gang learn their leader's secret. Hykes, who aspires to the leadership, snarls his intention of informing Nora as to her father's real character. A fight ensues. Police raid the place. Jethro escapes.

The man hastens to his shack and gets into his other clothes. Hykes, seeking to escape from the officers, clamors for admittance. Jethro opens the door. Hykes is electrified to see his chief. The latter proposes they fight a duel as the way of settling their differences. Hykes agrees. Both men crouch over the oil lamp in the center of the table. At a signal the men blow out the light and shoot. The room is lighted by four flashes. Hykes is heard to cry out and drop to the floor. The man fires one more shot at Jethro. Nora and her sweetheart return from a trip to the city. A messenger gives the girl a telegram. Nora opens it. It reads, "Your father lured to a river front house, shot and robbed. His assailant, notorious burglar, killed. Signed, Mitchell, Detective-Sergeant."

AN UNSEEN TERROR (Special—2 parts—Dec. 31).—Anita, Frank's sweetheart, objects to the boy's interest in criminology. Hugh, Frank's rival, resolves to win Anita at all hazards. Tully, a clerk, loses his savings in the stock market. He receives a tip which promises to net him a fortune if he can raise a few hundred dollars. Mr. Leonard, Frank's father, stumbles over a bludgeon, one of his son's curios. He throws it into the street in anger. Tully finds the weapon. He conceives the idea of getting money by crime. Later, the man strikes Leonard down and robs him. Hugh witnesses the assault. Leonard dies as the result of the blow. The bludgeon is recognized as Frank's property. Hugh conceals his knowledge of the murderer's identity. Frank makes his home near the scene of the murder, believing that the slayer will eventually return to the spot.

Tully learns that his victim is dead and flees from the city. Constant thought of the crime causes him to lose his mind. He feels an irresisitible desire to visit the scene of the murder. Anita becomes angry because Frank has devoted so little of his time to her since the night of the murder. She writes him a note declaring that she will break their engagement unless he calls that evening. Frank, however, writes that his vigil will make it impossible for him to obey her request. Hugh learns of this and urges Anita to break her engagement to Frank. Tully returns to the city. Frank sees the conscience-stricken wretch fearfully approach the scene of his crime. The criminologist captures the man. Tully confesses. Frank learns that Hugh had witnessed his father's murder. The boy calls at Anita's home. He reveals Hugh's despicable conduct. Anita orders the man from the house. With his arms about his sweetheart, Frank watches his rival slink from the room.

BILL'S BOARD BILL (Jan. 2).—While Bored Bill wonders where his next meal is to come from, opportunity hits him so hard that it knocks him flat. A thief being chased by police, throws a suitcase over the fence. It hits Bill on the head. The hobo finds an expensive suit of clothes in the suitcase. He dons it. A "boarder wanted" ad attracts his attention. He proceeds to the house and rents a room. Mrs. Cross, the landlady, feeds Bill on the fat of the land for the next two weeks. She then learns that Bill cannot pay his board. The woman confiscates his clothes. When Bill wakes up he discovers himself garmentless. He finds a lady's dress, however. Putting it on, he tries to escapes by climbing down the rainspout. A constable on the lookout for Second-story Sal, and the $50 reward offered for her capture, places Bill under arrest. The landlady learns of Bill's attempted escape. Before the constable is allowed to cart his prisoner away he is compelled to pay Bill's board. Bill, however, convinces the judge that he is not the female thief. He is discharged. The constable thinks of the money he has paid to Mrs. Cross. Determined to get his money's worth out of Bill, the man lugs him off to the woodpile. With his captor standing inexorably over him, Bill is compelled to work out his two weeks of luxury.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE RACE MEET (Jan. 2).—The Cambridgeshire Race Meet at Newmarket, is one of the classics of the English turf. This feature shows several thrilling views of the main event, in which Cantilever, the favorite, cantered home the winner.

Other interesting topical features are the honors bestowed upon the French generals during the review of the troops recently held at Paris; the visit of the King and Queen of England to Northampton a few days ago, etc.

A DREAM OF THE WILD (Jan. 3).—Tom reclines lazily in his morris chair. The pipe between his teeth is drawing well. His eyes scan the pages of the book of Indian tales until the type blurs. The young man's head nods, his eyelids droop. Tom is accidentally shot while on a hunting trip in Bear Canyon. Eagle Heart and his sister, Mountain Dew, arrive upon the scene. The Indian maid treats the wound. The young man loses his heart to Mountain Dew. When Eagle Heart learns of this he interferes. He tells Tom that he and his sister have sworn to have nothing to do with the palefaces. The story he tells is so vivid that Tom seems to visualize the incidents.

According to Eagle Heart, a band of white trappers attacked the camp of his people when he and Mountain Dew were children. In the battle both their parents were slain. The orphans ran from the camp in fright and sought shelter at the cabin of a settler. The latter drove them off, however. Later, Eagle Heart and Mountain Dew found the camp of another tribe, where they were adopted by an old squaw. As they grew up, the children swore to hate the palefaces because of the wrongs the latter had heaped upon them. Tom tries in vain to overcome the Indian's objections. Although Mountain Dew loves the white man, she silently departs with her brother.

Tom becomes conscious of a burning sensation in his shoulder. He leaps to his feet. For a moment he stares wildly about him. The familiar walls of his room restore him to his senses.

During his slumber, the pipe had slipped to his shoulder, where a spark from the bowl had burnt through his clothes to the flesh. He picks up the book of Indian tales he had been reading. For a moment he scans its pages. Then with a sigh for the Indian maid of his dream, he lays the book aside.

KINEMACOLOR.

SANTA CLAUS (3 parts).—Little Elsie is put to bed on Christmas Eve, and after her mother has wished her good-night, she falls asleep. Her dream forms the theme of the story. Old Santa Claus appears to her and persuades her to come with him up the old-fashioned fireplace. Alighting on the snow-covered roof, old St. Nicholas takes little Elsie into his sleigh and the dancing reindeers carry them off to Toyland. Arriving at Santa Claus' workshop, little Elsie is warmly welcomed by all the little Gnomes. Children will revel and delight in the wealth and beauty of the toys in this workshop. The excellent photography brings out every little detail of color and mechanism. The close views of Old Santa Claus explaning all the different toys are excellent.

The earth revolving in space—while in the distance is seen the dashing reindeers approaching with Santa Claus and little Elsie. A touching scene is presented when two little children are seen at their mother's knee praying for the safe return of their father, who is away at sea. Little Elsie and Old Santa overhear their petition and immediately communicate with Old Neptune at the bottom of the sea, to grant their request. This scene reproducing King Neptune's Court with his water nymphs gathered about him is bewildering in its beauty.

Little Elsie eagerly follows Santa Claus on his route, delighting in his magic and generosity in the children's ward of one of the big hospitals. Home again, Elsie is safely tucked into her bed by Old Santa and later is awakened from her dream by the entrance of her mother on Christmas morning. In an ecstasy of happiness little Elsie discovers her own bed covered with gifts from the fairy toy shop she visited in her dreams.

A MOTHER'S SPIRIT (2 parts).—The joyous spirit of Christmas pervades the house where Mr. and Mrs. Ormsby have collected toys for their two little children. A week before Christmas the mother sickens and dies. The father, wrapped in his grief, forgets the children and wraps himself up in his sorrow. The night before Christmas the neglected children slip from bed and hang up their stockings as usual, sure that if papa has forgotten them Santa Claus has not.

During the night the spirit of the mother returns; she sees her babies asleep and noiselessly gets the toys from their hiding-place and fills the stockings, gliding about unseen. Upon the book her husband has left on the table she leaves a red rose, her favorite flower, with which in life he always kept her supplied. Her mission accomplished, she vanishes.

On Christmas morning the children rush for their stockings; the astonished father questions the servants, but they deny having filled the stockings. Then he sees the rose, and knows the spirit of his beloved wife has come back to teach him a lesson. He throws aside his selfish grief and makes the Christmas a happy one for his babies, knowing full well the joy of his conduct will cause the "Christmas Spirit."

DOLLAR BILL (Two parts).—"Dollar Bill" was a desperate outlaw, according to the posters which advertised many times his face value as a reward for his capture, "dead or alive," which were displayed on posts and trees in Prickly Pear Canyon. Every cowboy was professedly looking for the said "Dollar Bill," with the hope of winning that reward—and the pretty schoolmarm.

"Dollar Bill," who is a clever counterfeit, is none other than Gentleman Jack, the classiest cowpuncher of the bunch, and chairman of the Board of Education. In the latter capacity it was his duty to welcome the new school teacher and install her in the new school house, which speedily became the Mecca of all the marriageable men in the camp. Such a universal thirst for learning had never before been known in Prickly Pear Canyon, even the Indians becoming inoculated so that Chief Pete tried to interfere.

The dominie seems to be Jack's principal rival, so he conceives the idea of disguising himself as "Dollar Bill," terrorizing the camp, and compelling the minister to perform a marriage ceremony with the schoolmarm. How well he succeeds can only be learned by seeing the picture.

WHOSE BABY?—Suppose you were a young man about to "commit" matrimony—in fact, the hour for the ceremony is near at hand—when suddenly you find that your wedding garments are creased and need pressing. You send the obliging janitress around the corner to the tailor's, and volunteer to take care of the baby until her return. And she does not return!

Such is the situation in which Bob finds himself. Meanwhile, the bride is "waiting at the church" until the impatient wedding party decide to go in search of the missing groom. Naturally, when they find him in bath-robe and pajamas, trying to pacify a squalling infant, pertinent questions as to its parentage arises.

Neither party knows that the janitress has met with an accident while crossing the street, and has been taken to the hospital; so Bob is having a very hard time to explain "Whose Baby"—when the bona fide father fortunately returns from work and settles this important question.

"Wedding bells" for Bob and his bride, and a warm bottle of milk for the baby complete the happy climax to this merry mix-up.

SLIM'S LAST TRICK (Jan. 1).—Slim and Zake are rivals for the hand of Molly. Slim figures that with the aid of prestidigitation he ought to be able to win Molly. He rehearses. Some of his tricks refuse to work, but as he has already announced a big performance he is obliged to hire an assistant. The exhibition is given in the corral and Slim does some wonderful stunts. Zake tries to queer the performance and is driven out. He plans revenge. For his last trick Slim borrows Molly's new hat. He sticks it under a box. Zake, who has sneaked up from behind and covered the fellow behind the box with his gun, succeeds in getting it, and replacing it with his own old hat.

Slim tells the audience that he will now make the hat disappear, and he gets the jolt of his life when he finds that it has disappeared. Molly demands that her hat be given back, and when Slim can't produce it there is a near riot. Slim sees a hat that looks like Molly's sticking over a nearby hedge, runs out and grabs it. He returns and gives it to Molly, who accepts it as her own. The real owner, who happens to be Molly's mother, appears and demands her hat back. Zake also returns with the real hat, and Slim gets the jolt of his life.

THE WINNING STROKE (Jan. 3).—The sheriff of Chicbise County, Arizona, writes the Tinkerton Detective Agency in Chicago to send out their best man, as the country is being flooded with bad money. The agency sends Frank Newhall. Frank meets and admires Tess, who lives with her father, a rough-looking character of the mountains. Tess sees Frank with a bag of counterfeit money. Frank found it in the road. Tess suspects him of being a counterfeiter. On the other hand Frank sees Jim in some suspicious situations and concludes that he is the bad money artist. Jim is shot from ambush. He is found by Frank, who takes him to Jim's cabin. In the search for water, Frank enters a small room in the cabin. There he finds counterfeit money and other paraphernalia.

Tess returns to the cabin. Frank orders Tess to ride for the doctor, which she does. Meanwhile, the real counterfeiters, one of whom fired the shot that wounded Jim, decides to go to his cabin and recover the property which he had taken from them. While Frank is in the second room the counterfeiters enter and cover Jim with their gun. Frank hears them from the other room, and although he can't figure out the situation he comes in and captures the counterfeiters. Tess returns with the doctor and the sheriff, who starts to arrest Frank. Jim pulls back his coat disclosing a detective badge, and so does Frank, clearing the confusion.

REX.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES (2 parts—Jan. 1).—A gypsy girl is brought to the sheriff by a ranchman with the demand that her people be forced to move off his land. The hot blooded woman no sooner sees the sheriff when she falls in love with him. She displays her womanly charms and the animal instinct in him is aroused.

Ella, the sheriff's sweetheart, is a simple sort of a country girl, yet the gypsy woman hates her and in turn, when the gypsy's name is connected with that of the sheriff by the town people, Ella also hates. She tells the sheriff that she will have nothing to do with him until the gypsy leaves town.

Understanding, or believing he does, the sheriff goes to the gypsy girl, tells her that they are of a different race, that their places in life are widely separted and she consents to leave with her folks. After their departure the sheriff is notified that a notorious outlaw is in his territory. He rides into the mountains. The outlaw successfully seeks refuge with the gypsies, though the girl washes her hands of the affair.

Later, the girl, though pursued and mortally wounded by the bad man, returns to where the sheriff had been left a captive by the gypsies, and releases him. She receives the knife meant for the sheriff and with the last spark of life, turns and stabs the outlaw to death.

The sheriff carries the body of the girl to town. He is seen approaching with the body across his saddle by the sheriff's sweetheart. After disposing of it, he knocks at the door. It is opened, his sweetheart sees him and closes it in his face. The sheriff throws the locket containing her picture to the ground and tramples on it, disgusted with it all. It was the bad "good" woman who ruined the life the good "bad" woman had saved.

KING THE DETECTIVE IN THE JARVIS CASE (2 parts—Dec. 29).—Caleb Jarvis, a mysterious old grouch, has been jilted in his youth by a young girl. Since that time he has lived the life of a recluse in a small village, shunned and despised by every one. One day as the postman comes to his house to deliver a letter he discovers the door open and getting no response to his repeated knocks, he enters and finds Caleb, murdered, lying on a couch with the assassin's revolver near him. He immediately summons assistance, but Caleb is apparently past all help. The county prosecutor leaves two policemen to guard the body and seeks the help of King, a detective, to find out who committed the crime. When King arrives the body has mysteriously disappeared, although the watchers have not stirred from the room in which it lay.

King orders them from the house and starts in his investigation. He discovers a picture on the wall of the lighthouse which has a peep-hole in it, and in attempting to make a closer investigation, accidentally touches a spring that releases a trap door in the lounge that he is standing on, and it precipitates him to an underground tunel that leads to another room. King follows up this tunnel, which comes out of a fireplace in the next room, and finds that Jarvis has been in hiding there and has not been killed at all. Jarvis seeing that he is discovered, places a bomb in the tunnel with a short fuse, but finds, after he lights it, that King has nailed down the hearth and escape is impossible. The bomb explodes and kills Jarvis, but he lives long enough to confess the following remarkable story.

One day as he was walking down the village street he met a girl who was the exact counterpart of the one who had jilted him years ago. He hurried to the city and found out through King the detective that this girl was the daughter of his former sweetheart, Nellie Saunders. On reaching home he planned that he would invite her to call on him a few minutes before it was time for the letter carrier to make his rounds and pretend that he had been murdered and so throw the blame of the crime on her. The prosecutor had advertised for a stenographer, and Nellie had come to the village in answer to it. It was a case of love at first sight with them and when King cleared the clouds from their path the inference leaves one to suppose that marriage bells will soon be chiming.

GOLD SEAL.

THE BUCCANEERS (3 parts—Dec. 30).—In the first scene we are taken on to the deck of Capt. LaFette's ship at the time a furious battle is raging between his crew and that of Blackbeard's, a rival buccaneer. There is the flash of cutlasses, hand-to-hand struggling between men with bare backs. Blackbeard is defeated—the leaders join hands later and agree to join forces.

Then follows another battle quite as exciting and furious and even more pitiable, for the victims include innocent men—sailors under the English captain and a woman and a child. The woman, wife of the captain, is slain before his eyes while defending her baby boy. LaFette decides to adopt the little fellow.

Twelve years pass and the boy, now a man, deplores his lot, finding consolation only in the tintype portrait of his dead mother. He has never actually served with the pirates in their desperate deeds. Blackbeard attempts to force LaFette to compel the boy to fight without success.

There is a shore leave for the men. The boy is forced to accompany the two captains on a visit to the governor, under the disguise of the Earl, and his two friends whom the pirates killed. The boy falls in love with the governor's daughter and is torn with grief at his false position. Blackbeard is disturbed with jealousy, for the girl is taken with the boy. But the boy's manhood, under the stimulous of love, awakens and he dominates both Blackbeard and LaFette.

In revenge Blackbeard turns state's evidence—informing the governor of who they really were by letter after their departure. In the raid that follows LaFette manages to escape. The boy is placed upon trial and tells his tale, which is discredited by Blackbeard. LaFette hears of the trial, gets to the Judge's court and manages to stagger in and tell the truth about the boy, which is needed to clear him. Blackbeard, wild at seeing himself thus trapped, shoots LaFette. The play closes with the boy and girl plighting their troth.

THE GOVERNOR'S VETO (2 parts—Dec. 31).—We are introduced in the first part of the story to a consumptive saloon keeper, John Carter, who has a wife and a little child that are seriously ill. When prohibition comes Carter's saloon is closed down and he soon finds himself in a destitute condition. Later, he is prevailed upon to open a "blind tiger" in one of the neighboring towns. This place is raided one night by the police, but they fail to secure evidence necessary to convict. Dean, a New York detective, is engaged by the prohibition committee to secure evidence.

It is shortly after this that the governor, experiencing one of his overpowering desires for liquor, is led to visit the place. Meanwhile, Dean catches Carter with the goods. Weltman, a political rival, is at the time visiting in the place. Aware that he is trapped Carter smashes the lamp; there is a struggle in the dark followed by a shot. Dean is killed and Carter is arrested for the murder. A locket belonging to Weltmon is found by Carter's wife.

Weltman calls on Governor Allen and demands that he sign a bill that will place thousands of dollars into the pockets of the grafters. Allen refuses, and Weltman threatens to expose him, telling him that if he signs Carter's pardon it will ruin his political career. The governor begs for one day to think it over. That night the locket belonging to Weltman falls into the Governor's hands and he is told of Carter's story. When Weltman threatens him on the next day he calmly displays the locket.

Allen vetoes the bill, signs Carter's pardon and forces Weltman, who is the District Attorney, to resign. With the money given them by the Governor's wife, Carter and his wife leave for Arizona to commence life anew.

NUTTY HAS BIG IDEAS (Jan. 4).—Nutty and his pal, Tired Teddy, are starving for the want of free lunch. They come upon a house and see a most tempting meal on a table. Waiting their chance they steal two enormous toy balloons from an old pedler. Painting two grotesque faces on the balloons they place their coats over their heads affixing the air bag to their collars, and present a most alarming appearance. They make their way through the window and sit down. The maid comes in; thinking them goblins she rushes out and informs the police that two men without heads are eating her master's dinner. Nutty and the other tramp see the cops waiting outside. They make a dash to escape, the policeman strikes them on the head. The balloons burst and in the excitement Nutty and his pal escape.

CUE AND MIS-CUE (Jan. 4).—Michael McCue is a billiard fiend. He arrives home nicely intoxicated and is greeted by a shower of knives, forks and plates, which he successfully dodges. The door is shut on him. He falls asleep on the sofa in the hall and has a most beautiful dream.

He is back in the billiard parlor. He takes a shot at a ball and it turns into a turnip. He tries again and a picture of his wife looms up. Once more he shoots and instead of hitting the ball smashes a bottle of whiskey. His friends chase him out. He enters a saloon. Still carrying his beloved cue, he attempts to shoot an apple off a friend's head. Immediately a profuse growth of hair appears. He becomes hungry and enters a restaurant, accompanied by the cue. Scolded by the waitress, he shoots an apple in her mouth and she is unable to close it. The chef cuts the apple piece by piece, almost slicing her mouth off.

An old maid above is enjoying a foot bath. He takes a shot at a picture on the wall and it moves forward. He shoots at it again and sticks the cue through the foot-tub. This awakens him and he is brought inside by his wife, sorry for her harsh treatment.

She falls a victim to his charms and he makes love to her Sal enters and chases the pair out of the room. The next evening when Hiram comes to visit the old maid Sal determines to turn the tables on her mistress and win him. Hiram falls for her and they are having a delightful time when the old maid enters. There is an awful fuss; the old maid runs to the street and returns with the policeman. He, remembering his old love, refuses to arrest her and begs her to return. They leave together while the old maid attempts to explain with difficulty to Hiram.

HUBBY'S NIGHT OUT (Dec. 30).—Hubby is a sport. His wife, who loves him dearly, awaits his homecoming one night and finally falls asleep in her chair. Hubby continues to have a good time at the poolroom, forgetting all about wife and home. The poolroom is raided and Hubby climbs up the fire escape and enters a room. It is that of a small boy, asleep. In order to escape through the line of policemen surrounding the building, he dons the boy's clothing and leaves his own. He returns home, passes his wife, who still sleeps, and turns in after hiding his stolen clothes. The next morning he swears that he was in early and his wife believes him until the boy calls at the house dressed in hubby's clothes. Confronted with the evidence, Hubby is forced to give the clothing back and stand a severe lacing from his wife. An amusing farce.

THE LIFTED VEIL (Jan. 4).—Grimshaw, a wealthy man, is cruel by nature. He refuses to allow his girl to see or receive attentions from Harry, a young man of sterling character, but poor. Grimshaw instructs his agent to secure the rent from his tenants on the first of the month and when some of them visit him to beg leeway, he refuses. They leave, cursing him. He goes up to his daughter's room and finds her in tears. Later, he returns downstairs and falls asleep musing.

He dreams that he is dead. He sees himself in his coffin. He dreams that his daughter dies and she, in spirit, takes him to her sweetheart and shows him the cold body of the boy that died by his own hand through grief. She takes her father to his tenements and there amid the squalid surroundings he sees the struggle for existence. He then sees himself in his coffin and all the people he has abused point their fingers at him.

He awakens with a start, glad to find that it was only a dream. However, the dream has made such an impression on him that he turns over a new leaf; he permits his daughter to marry the man she loves and allows the tenants plenty of time to pay their rent.

BISON.

THE GAMBLER'S OATH (2 parts—Jan. 3).—Dave Harding, having left a gambling house where he has won a sum of money from a treacherous Mexican, stands talking to his sweetheart. She sees with horror that the Mexican is at the window with drawn revolver. She steps before Dave and the shot meant for him ends her life. Dave swears to his dying sweetheart that he will never gamble again.

Ten years later Dave is a successful man. When the rancher dies, Dave promises to care for his daughter Nell. Later she marries a gambler. Her life is spent in poverty and uncertainty. She waits and watches for Jim, while he drinks, gambles, and finally loses all his money.

As a last chance Jim mortgages the ranch house, takes the money and goes once more to the gambling house. Dave remembers his promise to his dying sweetheart, but to give Nell a chance for happiness he breaks his oath and offers to play with Jim. He wins all the money. Jim is desperate. Dave says, "You've nothing left but your worthless life—stake that."

The crowd is aghast. Jim accepts, and when he loses and Dave holds out a gun to him the dazed man takes it and puts the barrel to his head. Dave takes the gun away from him, says "Go! Make amends to her; and if you ever gamble again I'll collect my debt." Jim swears that he will reform.

The last scene shows Dave in his cabin after the mortgage has been paid, and Jim and Nell are happy once more.

VICTOR.

THE FIELD FOREMAN (Dec. 29).—Kerrigan is the foreman of an oil field, brutal to the men under him, to animals, to his own sister and to his sweetheart. He is the rough boss of a rough set of men. The owner of the oil field dies and leaves the property to his daughter. She comes to look over the field and is thrown in close contact with the brute. She reads deep into his nature and shows a disdain for him, although deep down in her heart she admires the primitive, forceful elements of his character.

On the other hand the foreman learns to feel deeply for the girl, and is cut to the quick by her disdain. The story does with the smoothing out of the foreman's character until he is tamed and outbullied by something greater than physical strength. The story ends with the suggestion of love to come.

THE CORYPHEE (2 parts—Jan. 2).—After her show goes broke, Flo goes to stay with her cousin and his wife. John's wife, Jane, is anxious to enter society, but as his every moment is given to his work, he finds no time for social life. Seeing that Jane is made unhappy by his forced neglect, he entrusts her to his friend, Standing. Standing takes advantage of this to pay attention to Jane in order to learn John's secret. He has been offered for this a large bribe by a manufacturing concern. As soon as Flo joins the little family, she notices Standing's attentions. Suspicious of him, she makes herself a menace to his schemes by constantly forcing herself into his society.

Later Flo places herself between the wife and husband—she protects the wife from a compromising position and is ordered from the house by John. Space does not permit of telling in detail of the gripping action that leads up to the situation. Flo returns to her hallroom in the big city. She finds a letter awaiting her, telling her to join a troupe. She is happy for the sacrifice she has made to save Jane's good name.

NESTOR.

Their clandestine conversation is overheard by an unfriendly Indian and carried to the covetous chief. The lover is taken prisoner and taunted by the chief. Finally the chief raises a weapon to strike the prisoner dead. The girl jumps between and receives the blow, which wounds her mortally. The lover breaks his bonds and demands trial by conquest. This is granted. He fights with and kills the chief, and is himself elected chief of the tribe. But his heart is with the girl. He takes his own life, and the spirits of the two are seen to reunite in the Happy Hunting Ground.

Lee, a cowardly villain, has evil designs on the girl. With the help of two bearded cutthroats, the villain abducts the guileless maiden and takes her to his den of crime. Eddie wades through blood and fire and fights his way into the villain's lair. He is overpowered by the cutthroats while the villain snarls: "Tie the cur up, boys, while I go and marry the girl." The cutthroats drag the girl downstairs; Eddie bursts his bonds, and from the window he throws a rope to the sidewalk and lassoes the villain's revolver; the hero shoots six blocks down the street, and each of his five bullets strikes the gong in the fire department and sounds the alarm. In the meantime, the justice of the peace at the point of a revolver is marrying the villain and the innocent girl. The hero escapes from the den and joins the fire department, which is speeding toward the justice's office. The girl is rescued in the nick of time. However, the wicked villain outwits the hero. ## POWERS.

THREE CHILDREN (Dec. 29).—The story opens in the home of a poor family, composed of a father, mother, small boy, and old grandfather. The boy and the grandfather are pals. The boy would rather play with the old man than go out with other boys. An increase of family is expected. The parents, frightened at prospects of additional expense, send the grandfather to an old folks' home. This breaks the boy's heart he cannot understand, but the grandfather explains to him "I'm old, have no teeth, no hair, can't walk much, and your pa and ma can't afford to keep me."

The new baby arrives. It is red and fuzzy. It hasn't any teeth or hair, and it can't walk or talk. The boy is disgusted to think his parents would send grandfather away to make room for this new, useless arrival. He concluded, "It ain't any good and I'll trade it for grandpa." He takes the baby to the old folks' home, and tries to exchange it for his grandfather. The grandfather takes the boy and the baby home, and the parents are so deeply touched, that they refuse to allow the grandfather to return to the institution.

AN EVIL OF THE SLUMS (Jan. 2).—A dope fiend, so deep in drugs that he is beyond redemption, finds a boy in a poolroom. He tells the boy to leave the place while there is yet time, but the youth laughs and, like the moth, continues to flitter close to the flame. The boy goes home and robs his own mother; then returns to the dive to gamble. The dope fiend sees in the boy's face what he has done and he again remonstrates and tells him to take the money back. The boy promises to do this and the fiend leaves him. A number of youthful crooks, fresh from a robbery, trailed by the police, enter the room and fearing to carry their loot around with them, unload it on the boy. Before leaving him they give him a revolver.

In the next room a gambler has an altercation with a victim. The victim runs into the room where the boy is seated. The gambler shoots through the door and kills his man. In his nervousness the boy discharges the revolver in his hand. The police enter and arrest the boy for the murder. The dope fiend enters and notices the bullet hole in the door. He enters the next room and finds the gambler's revolver. Realizing that his own life is worthless, he takes the blame for the murder to save the boy. However, the discovery of the gambler hiding in a closet reveals the real murderer and both dope fiend and boy are released. The boy and the fiend left alone, the boy promises that he will forever forsake such dives.

RELIANCE.

THE FLY LEAF OF FATE (December 22).—Ralph Cummings is engaged to Hilda Hawthorne until George Blake, a wealthy banker, comes along and she marries him. Cummings, who is a writer and poor, takes it much to heart, and vows always to remain true to his ideal, although she has disappointed him sorely.

He is in the habit of browsing over books at an old book store where he meets Mary Sharp, the daughter of the proprietor. She falls in love with Cummings, who does not realize it. He finds an old school book of Hilda's among the books on sale and buys it as it has her name in it. He hears later that she is a widow. He calls, but she laughs at him and sneers at his poverty. He goes away and once more goes back to the book store to find the real girl.

THE ALTERNATIVE (Dec. 24).—Jack Bolt, a convict, receives a letter from his wife telling him their daughter, Ida, is seriously ill. Bolt is frantic to escape and fortune favors him, for that day he is enabled to make a get-away hidden in the supply wagon as it is leaving the jail. The guards pursue the wagon, but are checked by an approaching freight train. Bolt is enabled to get to the other side of the track before the train passes, and jumping from the wagon he boards the freight train and so escapes.

Parson Brown and wife leave their little son, Bob, in care of the maid while they go to a lecture, but the maid neglects the little boy and goes off spooning with the new cop. Bob reads himself to sleep, Bolt arrives on the freight train, and sneaks along the rear of the houses, trying to find some place where he can steal clothes to replace his convict suit. Parson Brown's house looks easy and Bolt enters through a window without trouble. He enters Bob's room, then enters to interior. As he closes the door the draft from the open window and the door causes the gas to blow out. Bolt finds a suit of the parson's and is about to make his escape when he smells gas. He investigates and finds Bob unconscious. He is confronted with the alternative of leaving the boy to die, or having his own escape cut off. His better nature prevails, and he works over the boy so intently that he does not notice the parson's entrance. The parson realizes Bolt's sacrifice and prays for guidance in what he should do, let him go or inform the police. While the parson is praying Bolt settles the question by escaping through an open window. He arrives at his own home to find his little daughter on the road to recovery, so he resolves to be worthy of the clothes that he stole.

GIOVANNI'S GRATITUDE (2 parts—Dec. 27).—George Rankin is superintendent of a large factory. He is out walking with his wife when they see a crowd of boys attacking a young Italian newsboy. They rescue him, take him to a restaurant, and give him some money.

A year later, the boy's grandmother dies. Being left alone, he remembers Rankin, and going to his factory, receives employment. He gains the enmity of two Italian workmen and later discovers them in a plot to blow up Rankin's home. Rankin discharges them. The two Italians return to their homes.

That evening they see the boy talking to a young girl. They attack him, and he, in self-defense, draws his knife. An old peace-loving Italian jumps between them and receives a stab from one of the Italians. By lying they fasten the crime upon the boy, who, half believing that he really struck the old man, takes to the hills. A crowd of Italians, together with the sheriff and his posse, search for him. While in hiding in the woods the boy again overhears the two Italians plotting to blow up Rankin's home that night. The boy is torn between conflicting emotions whether to save himself, or his friend, Rankin. Looking down from a hill, which overlooks the back of Rankin's home, he sees the two Italians throw a lighted bomb through the cellar window of Rankin's home. Running madly down he enters the cellar through the window, gets the bomb and throws it out of the window, just as the two blackhands, who saw him enter the cellar, rush up to restrain him. They are just in time to receive the full force of the bomb. This ends their lives and their plan of revenge. The explosion brings Rankin and his wife from the house. At this point the boy's sweetheart comes upon the scene. She was an unseen witness of the old Italian's death. Explanations follow and the boy is cleared and received into Rankin's home.

BRONCHO.

A MILITARY JUDAS (3 parts—Jan. 7).—Jim Warren, a lieutenant in the Confederate Army, is given to drinking and gambling with other officers and losing all his money, gives another officer, William Ford, notes to cover the amount. Robert Tole, in the secret service of the Union, who has made his headquarters at the hotel where most of the gambling is done, watches Jim closely, asks him to his room, tells him that if he will give him certain information regarding the movements of the Confederate Army, he will give him money enough to pay up the notes. At first Jim is indignant, but realizing that he will be disgraced if he does not pay the notes, accepts Tole's proposition. As a result of his treachery, the South meets a disastrous defeat. The Confederate general in command, knowing that the defeat is due to some one giving out information, orders a thorough investigation and all strangers arrested. Robert Tole is among those arrested, and in trying to make his escape, is mortally wounded. He confesses that Jim Warren is the man who had given him the information. In the meantime, Jack Warren, the older brother of Jim, and who has been a guardian of Jim all his life, has been arrested for the crime. A note has been found on Tole, which bears the same water mark as the note paper found in Jack's room. Jim goes to the general and confesses that he is the man who is the traitor, but the general will not believe, having a written confession from Jack. Jim, filled with remorse, commits suicide and Jack tells his mother and father that Jim died fighting for his country. Ethel Wade, who is loved by both the boys, received a letter from Jim confessing the crime, and she realizes the wonderful sacrifice Jack has made.

DOMINO.

EILEEN OF ERIN (2 parts—Dec. 26).—The story takes place in a little Irish settlement on the coast of Ireland. Dennis Morrissey is chosen leader of the Patriots and his mother, who is rather superstitious, has an old woman tell her fortune from a tea cup. The old woman tells her that Denny has been captured by the English and put into prison, and as she sees him (in a vision) about to be hanged, she breaks the tea cup and tells no more. Father Maloney, who has entered just in time to hear part of the fortune, tries to comfort the widow, as does Eileen, Dennis' sweetheart.

Later we find Ireland in rebellion. In a fight which takes place near Dennis' home, he takes refuge in his cottage, using the furniture as a barricade, trying to protect Eileen and his mother. He is captured by the English after a desperate fight, placed in prison and sentenced to death. Father Maloney visits the prison and hears the colonel order the arrest of Eileen and the widow for assisting in the outbreak. The priest hurries to help the women escape. In the meantime, Dennis is being taken to the scaffold, when a brother Irishman manages to cut the rope that binds his hands. In an instant everything is confusion and Dennis escapes. He is pursued by the soldiers and as a last desperate chance jumps into the sea and swims to the ship on which the priest, the widow and Eileen have taken refuge

AMERICAN.

IN THE FIRELIGHT (2 parts—Dec. 29).—When old Abner settled back in his big armchair before the firelight, he pondered over the added joys that had thrilled his jovial soul within the past fortnight. He soon sank in a deep reverie, which carried him back over a period of twenty years. He was alone in the home, those near and dear had been called away to the far beyond, and he hungered for the companionship of someone to share the bright glare of the open hearth, the comforts of a well appointed home, for Abner had been a prosperous farmer.

It is not surprising, therefore, when Ned, a little waif of 12, applied for shelter, that he received a warm welcome. Ned proved a deserving little chap and soon had nestled close to the affections of Abner. Later fate brought in Nell, a little orphan, whom Abner took to his home when the mound over her mother's grave had been completed. The three playmates grew to be very warm friends in a short time, ever solicitous for each other's welfare under the wise guidance of old Abner.

One night as the setting sun was casting its glow over the horizon a stranger rode up on horseback and his winsome look won the unsophisticated Nell at first sight. Ned observed for a time and ventured well meant caution, expressed his fears to his guardian, old Abner, but all in vain. Nell was captivated and Abner thought he had his charge well in hand. The stranger called often and Nell was wont to meet him clandestinely and sit long in the moonlight. When invited to desert her home of cheerfulness, Nell rebelled; she would have her lover see Abner and ask his consent to their marriage. She was sincere and the stranger complied, but met with refusal. Then he succeeded in persuading Nell to go against her protector's wishes. One night the stranger called and Nell silently stole from the fireside that meant so much to her and met her lover and together they drove away to the city in a big auto.

Old Abner waited for word, but none came. Wearied of waiting, Ned was sent to the city that he might find Nell. He met the stranger, wanted to fight, but was quieted into the belief that he would find Nell happy and delighted in her new home. They would first have a little refreshment and he could then go with him to Nell. Instead Ned was induced to have a social drink; one followed another, and the stranger left him at the fashionable restaurant in an inebriated condition. Poor Ned had never tasted liquor and did not know its effect. Through the kind intercession of another patron he was spared the humiliation of being ejected.

In the meantime the stranger had returned to his home and already tired of his fancy he concluded to desert Nell. Heartbroken, she pleaded, begged and cried, but all for naught. She would follow him—she did, only to be openly rebuked and repulsed. Slowly her steps led her to the water's edge. The thought chilled her. No, not that. She turned back to the cold, gray lights of the city. Whither she went she knew not, but God would lead her. And He did, right back to Ned, whom she found still seeking the man who had taken his Nell from him. Ned pictured to her the bright firelight, the cheerful guardian and only father they knew, and he won her back.

Old Abner sat up late and watched and waited and prayed that the light of the fireside would bring back to him the boy and girl he had reared, and whom he had learned to love as his own. Each night he had left a big lamp in the window, that its rays might lead back to him his children. He went to sleep in the chair so that he might be there to greet them. They came, silently they entered. Ned touched him gently. "My boy, thank God, and did you find Nell?" For answer he looked toward the door. Yes, there she stood, sad and dejected. Slowly he raised his arms. Nell saw, and with one deep sigh of relief she nestled to the old man's bosom. God had answered his prayer.

THE MISER'S POLICY (Jan. 3).—At the death of her father, little Katy became an orphan. By the terms of the will her uncle was to receive the fortune providing he took care of the girl. This the man agreed to do, but he was influenced more by the reward than by his love for his niece.

For the first years Katy was perhaps a little care, but she soon made herself indispensable by her services, and as she grew older her uncle found her presence a decided advantage. When, in time, her charming presence made her the recipient of the attentions of young men, her guardian found a pretense of some kind under which he could turn away the suitor. Ambitious young Benny, however, struck out boldly to make a success of himself, and his energy soon conquered. He wrote back to Katy that he would soon return to claim her as his wife. This letter the old man intercepted and retained—his avaricious nature was his master. A troubled conscience saw a vision of his fortune flitting away from him and he brought out his riches to gloat over it. In this attitude he was found by Katy and Benny, who had returned and demanded an explanation. They were not inclined to accept his flimsy explanations, but the pitiable old miser pleaded so earnestly for a pardon that the happiness of the young couple would feign allow them to resist his supplications

PRINCESS.

CUPID'S LIEUTENANT (Dec. 26).—Billy Drew, just home from college, meets Muriel, the village school teacher. Attraction ripens into love for both until Muriel's scholars make it plain to her that she has been neglecting them in favor of Billy. Muriel, awakened to her duty to her scholars, returns Billy's ring, and begins to forget, but the children notice her usual joyfulness has turned to gloom, and are unhappy. Tommy, the love god's lieutenant, the cause of the estrangement, now decides to bring Muriel and Billy together. He becomes so unruly that he is compelled to remain after school, and then despatches a messenger to bring Billy back to cure the teacher's blues.

MAJESTIC.

THE PRISONER OF THE MOUNTAINS (Dec. 21).—Richard Stevens was president of a large mining company. While not controlling a majority of the stock, he possessed the confidence of the directors and stockholders, and in spite of efforts to depose him, he was the absolute ruler of the corporation. A new director was elected, William Gurley, a wealthy, unscrupulous man. He planned and schemed to gain control of the company, but his efforts proved hopeless. But finally his opportunity came. Stevens, while hunting, fired at and wounded a bird. He rushed out to seize it and was struck by a passing automobile. The driver, fearing that he killed the unconscious man, drove off at full speed, and there Gurley, passing in his automobile a short time afterwards, found him. He realized his opportunity and decided to profit by it. Stevens was lifted into the automobile and taken to a lonely hut in the mountains, where he was held a prisoner by two men in Gurley's pay.

The disappearance of the millionaire created much attention. His daughter was grief-stricken, but all efforts to find her father proved hopeless. The annual election of officers of the mining company drew near, and Gurley felt certain of becoming the new president. But the keen mind which had made Stevens a leader in his profession did not desert him, even though he was a prisoner in the hands of desperate men. He learned from his guards that the lake which he could see from the mountain would flow into the aqueduct when the floodgates were opened at the acqueduct celebration. Watching his opportunity, he wrote an appeal for help and enclosed the missive in a bottle, which he flung far into the lake. The bottle was found by a young civil engineer, the fiancé of Stevens' daughter. He read the appeal for help and hurried to the millionaire's assistance. Stevens was freed and arrived at the offices of the mining company in time for the election. Gurley was defeated and the disclosure of his treachery resulted in his expulsion from the company.

MRS. BROWN'S BURGLAR (Dec. 23).—Brown was a married man who liked to go on sprees and stay out late. Mrs. Brown was well aware of his propensity, and did her best to curb it. Willie Brown, their ten-year-old son, had an exceeding fondness for jam and frequently raided the pantry, but when detected, invariably felt the weight of his parents' displeasure.

Willie's likeness for jam was the first of a combination of circumstances which created "Mrs. Brown's Burglar." He was caught enjoying his favorite dainty and soundly spanked by his father, whereupon Brown departed for a night of gayety. Willie's resentment towards his parents grew stronger. He knew his mother feared burglars, so he made a dummy with a suit of his father's clothes. He placed it under the bed in his parents' room and then summoned his mother. She promptly decided that the form under the bed was a burglar, and fled to a nearby drug store, where she telephoned the police. In the meantime, a passing tramp, noticing that the door of the Brown home was open, entered and went to sleep on the open bed. The policemen, summoned to the drug store, listened to Mrs. Brown's story and then hurried to the house. The tramp was a husky individual and he was more than a match for the three officers. While they were struggling in the bedroom, the husband, much the worse for wear, entered his home. He heard the commotion upstairs, concluded, in his half-drunken condition, that burglars were in the house, and made his preparations. The officers, badly worsted in their fight with the hobo, fled helter-skelter down the stairs and were greeted by a volley of water from the garden hose. Finally they got the hose away from Brown and marched him off to the station. He was thrown into a cell, and had ample time to sober up and reflect upon his wrongs. Mrs. Brown, summoned to her husband's aid, proved that he was not a burglar, and Brown was released.

Unfortunately for Willie, his parents discovered that he was the author of the burglar scare, and the trouncing he got was one that he long remembered, and he never, never touched jam again, not even when it was offered to him.

THE PRIDE OF THE FORCE (Dec. 27).—Nora was a splendid cook, and an acquisition to any household, but she had one drawback, she had athletic aspirations. Day after day she engaged in boxing bouts with Bridget, her friend. Finally her employers discharged her, and Nora, cast out into the dreary world, decided to become a policeman.

The force welcomed her with open arms, and the life of an officer of the law appealed to her mightily. As she passed the side door of a saloon, glasses of beer were handed to her, while her heart filled with joy as she arrested women who wore hobble skirts and chased small boys shooting craps.

An adventurous lunatic, however, proved her Waterloo. He was a harmless fellow, who prowled around the asylum grounds, carrying the hose for the gardener. He continually asked people for a few more feet of hose and seemed grieved that few people around the asylum supplied him with the necessary commodity.

Nora was enjoying a comfortable sleep upon a doorstep when the lunatic appeared. He gently tickled her nose with a feather until she awoke. The large knife which he carried terrified her, and she ran off at full speed, followed by her pursuer. The knife was a potent argument, for every policeman in the station ran behind desks and chairs.

"Can't you let me have a few feet of hose?" the lunatic inquired. The bewildered policemen complied with his request and he happily departed from the station house to the asylum. But Nora was thoroughly disgusted and disheartened and went back to the cook stove.

THANHOUSER.

AN ORPHAN'S ROMANCE (Dec. 23).—When the girl's mother died she believed that her last friend had gone, for the step-father, who was under obligations to care for her, was a cruel countryman, who treated her like a slave. Then hope came in the shape of a letter from her aunt, a wealthy society woman, who lived just outside of New York. She offered to care for the orphan, and the girl gladly left her country life behind her. In her new environment, she attracted the attention of a young millionaire, who fell deeply in love with her. It happened that the girl's cousin loved the same man and was wild with rage at being cut out.

The millionaire was called away to Europe by business, and after his departure the orphan was convinced by her aunt and cousin that the millionaire and the cousin were engaged. Not suspecting that she had been tricked, she secretly left her relatives, and secured a position in a New York City hospital, intending to become a trained nurse. When the young man returned from abroad, he was unable to find any trace of the girl, but contrary to what the other women had hoped, his love did not turn to the cousin, instead he devoted all of his time to the apparently vain object of finding the girl he loved.

While crossing a New York City street one day, the young man was knocked down and seriously injured by an automobile. He was taken to the nearest hospital, and as it happened, this was the institution where the orphan was a nurse, and at the time the young man was brought there the orphan was in charge of the accident ward, to which he was assigned. The orphan recognized the millionaire and sent for her cousin, believing she was entitled to nurse and care for him. The cousin was not entirely bad, and shocked and saddened by the accident, she freely confessed her fault, cleared away the misunderstandings that had existed and made the orphan's romance have a happier ending after all.

HIS FATHER'S WIFE (Dec. 26).—The elderly broker had plenty of money, but it never struck him for a moment that a woman could marry him for his wealth alone. He really believed he was quite fascinating and his demure little stenographer played upon this belief, so that in the course of time he was convinced that she really loved him. Matters were brought to a crisis by the broker's only son, who learned of the "romance" and told his father that the woman who aspired to be the son's step-mother was only an adventuress. The broker was indignant, and yielding to a sudden impulse, he urged the girl to marry him that very day. She consented, and thus the son's interference only hastened the catastrophe. The woman never forgave him; she did all she could to cause trouble between father and son, and succeeded so well that within a short time the young man was practically an outcast in the home where he was born. The woman then cajoled her husband and finally induced him to make a new will, leaving all of his fortune to her. She had the precious document, but, unluckily for her, talked indiscreetly with her brother, not knowing that her husband was within earshot. In a very few moments the broker learned that the son's opinion was justified and that the wife was merely a designing woman, who had married for wealth alone.

In an effort to right the wrong, the broker made a new will, leaving all to his son. He placed this in a tin box, and was on his way home with it in his auto, when he was suddenly stricken, and as he dropped over helpless, the box fell into the street unnoticed. A little girl picked it up, and being unable to open it, decided it would make a lovely couch for her doll, and there the document, which was sought by the son, remained for several days. The broker was taken home unconscious, and died without being able to explain that his son was his only heir. The widow promptly told the son that there was nothing for him and ordered him from the home of his childhood.

The right triumphed in the end, however, for the will was found in a most peculiar way, but only after the little girl's house had been destroyed by fire and the son had proven by his bravery that he was the kind that are justly classed as heroes.

KAY-BEE.

THE HARVEST OF SIN (Dec. 26).—Jim Neal, proprietor of the Halfway Saloon, between Tuscon and Gold Creek, is discovered selling liquor to the Indians by the minister. When Jim is asked to desist, he tells the minister that he is running the place and he will please mind his own business. The minister pleads with him, telling him that the place is not a fit home for his little daughter. Mrs. Neal, realizing that which the minister says is true, takes the little girl and starts to visit her sister in a distant settlement. She is attacked by the Indians, crazed with firewater. Hiding the little girl in the bushes, she drives on alone, but is captured by the Indians and tied to a tree.

In the meantime Jim has gotten into a fight at the saloon and is driven out. The minister finds the little girl and is returning to the settlement with her, when he is seen by Jim who, feeling that he is the cause of his trouble and feeling that he is kidnapping his child, fires at the minister, killing his horse. He is much surprised when he hears the story of the child. He asks the minister to take the child safely to the settlement while he goes to the rescue of his wife. Jim sees troops approaching, and realizing that they are about to be caught in a trap by the Indians, warns them. The soldiers turn the tables on the Indians, capture them and rescue Mrs. Neal. That night they find Jim, dead, with a note to his wife in his hand, telling her that the minister was right.

SIMPLE SIMON HAS A FRIGHT (Dec. 30).—Simple Simon was smitten with a charming young lady and followed her home and indoors. He wrote her a note in which he said he was ready to consecrate his whole life to her. The note fell into the hands of the lady's husband, a celebrated surgeon, who determined to give Simon a fright. He had a patient who desired a good pair of legs and as Simple Simon had exhibited considerable agility, Dr. Corbett saw a way of supplying the unusual order. Simon was seized and placed on the operating table where his legs were amputated. It must have been a painless operation and Simple Simon declined to believe that his legs had been cut off until he saw the ten toes trying to dance a farango. Then he believed his eyes. Philosopher throughout, he bought another pair of legs for eighteen pence, but subsequently resolved that he would not walk again. He left the house propelling himself on a low truck—a scream.

TINY TIM FRIGHTENS HIS MOTHER (Jan. 1).—Tiny Tim was imprisoned by his mother in the attic for helping himself to jam out of the cupboard. He wrote a note saying that if he was not released, he would jump out of the window. He lowered the note to the window of the room where his mother sat. Then he pitched a large doll out of the window. Seeing the fall of the doll, his mother concluded that he had carried out his threat. When the boy's father came into the room, he heard what had happened, and Tiny Tim's appearance enraged him. Then the father did a rash thing, he seized Tiny Tim and flung him out of the window. The fall would have killed the boy but for the fact that the cook was entering the house with her apron full of vegetables. Tim came hurtling through the air and fell plumb into the widespread apron, and his life was saved. A film that will cause merriment.

THE SUFFRAGETTES' REVENGE (Jan. 1).—Helen refused to marry Charles St. Lolo until he had done something to distinguish himself. He wrote an article for the papers ridiculing the methods and manners of the suffragettes, loudly proclaiming that the spectacle of the suffragettes who could neither mend socks, cook nor dress even a tiny child, would make him laugh if it did not make him cry. The fat was in the fire! The ladies held a committee meeting. Such an attack upon the "cause" called for condign punishment. How would it do to beard the lion in his den and show him and his friends that they were capable of dealing with such as he? Late at night the committee raided the house, roused Charles from sleep, and dressed him in swaddling clothes. They they sent for Helen, whose ideas of distinguished conduct differed from those of the would-be lover. Poor Charles was derided and Helen joined the "cause."

FAMOUS PLAYERS.

A DAUGHTER OF THE HILLS (Three parts—Dec. 20).—Sergius, one of Nero's most powerful gladiators, prior to an impending contest in the arena, goes into the country, where, in his travels, he encounters Floria, a shepherdess, with whom he falls in love. Floria makes Sergius her idol, worshipping his enormous strength. But the vast divergent trait in their characters is disclosed, when one of Floria's lambs is wounded, causing her genuine misery, which completely mystifies Sergius, who ridicules her anxiety for the suffering animal. A little later, Sergius marries Floria, and takes her to Rome, where he introduces her to the wealth and luxuries of the city. All is new and wonderful to the simple shepherdess, but one day, prompted by curiosity, she follows Sergius to the arena. Through an opening in the wall, she sees her husband, stripped for battle, awaiting his opponent. Soon the contesting gladiator appears, unwilling to fight, and driven out by lashes. With a sickening heart she watches the cruel contest. Her husband gains the mastery, and at a signal from Nero, with cheers from the applauding multitude, runs his sword through his opponent's body. The slaves enter, throw a robe over the corpse, and drag it off. The grim sight fills the gentle girl with complete revulsion, and at that moment all her love dies. In fear and trembling, she runs home and crouches in a corner, afraid of the strength which, until now, she had so admired. When Sergius returns he tries to make her understand, but she cannot forgive him, and in the dead of night she escapes from the house and wanders away. Sergius sends his slaves to seek her, but their quest fails, and Sergius decides to search for her himself. Floria takes refuge at the house of Paul, the Apostle, who, at that time, while considered a prisoner, possessed the liberty of his home and the right to continue his preaching, though always chained to a Roman. He listens to her story sympathetically, but before the interview is terminated, Sergius, in a towering rage, arrives on the spot, and brutally insults and threatens Paul. Paul attempts to overcome the savage instincts of the other, and after some thought, advises Floria to return with her husband. Against her will, Floria obeys. Sergius brings Floria home, and is about to beat her, when he sees a vision of the girl with the wounded lamb. On the instant, he seems to understand Floria's tender sympathies, his better nature awakens, and that night he steals back to Paul's house, where he finds the disciple preaching to the rabble, accenting his speech with the rattle of his chains. The gladiator, impressed by Paul's gentle words, is regenerated. He returns home and receives an edict from Nero ordering him to prepare for a gladiatorial fight. He realizes that if he disobeys the mandate he will be deprived of his power and wealth, against which is balanced only Floria's love. He undergoes a terrific struggle with himself, and the next moment he breaks the sword across his knee, tosses the pieces away, renouncing all material possessions for the love of his wife. The two, deprived of all but their faith and love, go back to the hills and peace.

A LADY OF QUALITY (Five Reels—Jan. 1).—News is received by Sir Jeoffrey, a dissolute roue, whose contempt for the other sex extends even to his own daughters, of the arrival of another female child in the family. The mother dies shortly after, and the child Clorinda is brought up among the servants without a guiding hand. True to his vow to ignore his offspring Sir Jeoffrey does not come in contact with Clo. until her sixth year, when he finds her playing with his powder horn in the great hall of his castle, Wildair, and sternly upbraids her. The child, who has inherited her father's courage and strength of will, shows no fear, and grasping a riding crop beats Sir Jeoffrey with all the fury of her tiny wrath. Her spirit and daring attract Sir Jeoffrey's attention, and he is delighted to find the child his own. From that moment, he keeps her in his own company, dressed in boy's clothing to obscure her sex, a member of his wanton circle. She grows up in this atmosphere of debauchery, and learns to swear, smoke and drink. Years later, at a hunting party, she meets the Duke of Osmonde and other great gentlemen, who are shocked at her male attire and rough manners. In a spirit of pious benevolence, Lord Twemlow sends his Chaplain to Wildair Hall to censure Sir Jeoffrey for permitting his daughter to grow up in this wild style. Clo. overhears the Chaplain's remonstrances and realizes the true significance of her reckless habits. Meantime, her notoriety has reached London, and Sir John Oxon, the beau ideal of the town, lays a wager that he will win the heart of Clo., not as a hoyden, but as a woman. He arrives at Wildair Hall on Clo.'s birthday-night, and banters her on her claims to masculine prowess. Stung by his derision to prove she has all the attributes of a man, she challenges him to a duel in which Sir John Oxon is badly worsted. However, his sarcasm has had definite effect and at the striking of the midnight hour she gives the toast to the assembled noblemen: "Behold me for the last time clad in trousers!" Later she appears in the Hall dressed in all the finery of a lady of quality, and from that moment bends every effort to attain that title legitimately. Sir John Oxon plies all his wiles to win her untutored heart, and she finally falls a victim to his flattery. Secretly she meets him in the rose garden, but publicly she slights him in the great halls. Nevertheless, Oxon wins her confidence, and she bestows her first kiss upon his lips: but not without a price, for at that moment he steals one of her raven curls, the proof of his wager. He hastens back to London to boast of his conquest, but in an intoxicated moment he hides the curl for safe keeping, forgetting where. Clo waits for his return and is shocked when she receives news from London that he is to wed a wealthy lady of title. At this critical moment in her life the old Earl of Dunstanwolde asks her hand in marriage, and piqued at having thrown her affections so idly away, she accepts. A half hour later, she meets the Duke of Osmonde, and recognizes in him the man she loves. Faithful to her promise, she marries the Earl of Dunstanwolde, and becomes his devoted wife until he dies two years later. Sir John Oxon, having failed to make his match, and aware that Clo. now possesses wealth, influence and position, tries to win back the heart he had so ruthlessly cast aside. But Osmonde has triumphed over her affections, causing jealousy and hatred to creep into the heart of Oxon. Chance places again in his hand the lost curl, which he holds over her head as a silken sword. Stunned by the fear that she will lose the love of Osmonde through the accusing evidence of the curl, in an intensely dramatic scene in which Oxon attempts to force his embraces upon her, she strikes him across the temple with her riding crop. He falls to the floor: she lashes him: the pale, still body lies there—dead. At that moment guests arrive, she conceals the body under the couch, and in the dead of night she drags it down into the deep cellar. For years afterwards, she atones for her sin by paying Oxon's debts, consoling the women he had wronged, and in other ways undoing the evil he had wrought.

A LEAF IN THE STORM (Three parts).—The story opens in a New York tenement where Miss Leonard is living in hopes of finding the means to support herself and little baby. A month before, her husband had been killed in a mine accident and Miss Leonard sought the city, leaving her child in the care of a neighbor. She is aroused by a knock on the door. A youth of the underworld, struck with her beauty, has followed her home. He tells her where she can secure work. When he offers her money to pay for a new dress, she understands, and drives him from the room. Another knock. It is her landlord. She must pay her rent in the morning.

Her eye falls on the card left by the "cadet." That night she appears at the dance hall. Once within her soul revolts. A "cadet" endeavors to restrain her, but the proprietor ejects him. At this moment a woman in evening dress arrives on a slumming tour. There is a pistol duel between two gangsters and the woman is injured, but not seriously. She confides in Miss Leonard that she is married to a young Englishman, heir to his father's fortune, and is on her way abroad. She engages Miss Leonard as nurse companion. On board ship the woman proves to be a drunkard.

A storm arises. The life-boats are wrecked. The two women are washed ashore on a desert island and are sheltered by a sailor, himself a victim of a previous shipwreck. The sailor and the Englishman's wife begin a drunken carouse on rum that has washed ashore. Miss Leonard fails to arouse them from their stupor when a sailing vessel comes to take them off. Swiftly she gathers the woman's proofs together, exchanges wedding rings and a month later lands in England and is accepted as the son's wife. After a time the true wife appears but is turned away. In the moment of her triumph she realizes the futility of it all, and leaving a note of confession disappears. A nephew, who has fallen in love with her, follows her to America. Just as she is about to leave with her baby from the city, he finds her and there is a joyful reunion.

THE VAGABOND'S CONSPIRACY (Three parts).—At the Spada Palace the seventh birthday of the twin daughters Rose and Alice is celebrated. Their resemblance being so close, a birthmark on Alice is the only means of identification in distinguishing one from the other. While their young guests are playing in the garden, Alice is attracted to the gate by the passing of a gypsy, Myrka, with her young son, Momo. To avenge the death of her daughter caused by the runaway of the princess' horses, Myrka persuades her son to lure Alice to the entrance and kidnaps her. Broken-hearted, the princess loses her reason. Fifteen years have elapsed.

Nardot, the chief of a notorious band of thieves, is in love with Alice, whom they call Zula. Momo, grown up with her from childhood, is also fondly in love with her and disapproves of Nardot's attentions.

Nardot arranges a meeting with Myrka at the rendezvous of the underworld to ask for Zula's hand in marriage, and by getting Myrka in an intoxicated state, learns of Zula's real origin. Momo, by chance overhears the conversation and is determined to spoil a plot to use Zula as an accomplice to the looting of the Spada Palace. Taking Zula with him, Nardot gains entrance to the palace, with the thought that if captured, he will be set free, because of her presence.

Left to wander by herself, Zula fails to recognize her surroundings. Confronted with the likeness of her lost child, the princess recognizes Zula as her daughter, Alice, and there is a happy reunion. In attempting to escape, Nardot is shot by one of the palace guards. The princess readily consents to the marriage of Alice and Momo.

Paul and Olga's father appear and they help the wounded man to Treskoff's home. The baron meets Olga and is fascinated by her. Realizing that he cannot deliver the secret plans because of his injuries, the baron dispatches Paul with the papers, getting his oath that he will under no conditions disclose the identity of the sender. Just as Paul delivers the envelope containing the plans, he is captured by secret service men and arrested for a crime that he is guiltless of and on the strength of the circumstantial evidence and his refusal to speak is sentenced to Siberia. Olga Treskoff becomes the wife of Baron Barovitch. In the meantime it is discovered that he is the real culprit. Olga fatally stabs the chief of police of Russia, who had insulted her, and accompanies her husband to Siberia. There the baron meets Paul. She finds shelter with Suzanne, who is employed in the same sweatshop. The two live in a small, sparsely furnished room. The next day the factory where they are employed temporarily shuts down. Alone they have to struggle for their daily existence. They soon obtain employment, but their joy is short-lived, since they are laid off for an indefinite period. Caught in the whirlpool of despair, friendless and without funds, the two girls battle against temptation. Landis, a young medical student, offers assistance, but Louise refuses. Sorrowful, indeed, is their plight. Their savings have been used up and they are evicted from their tenement room. Worn out and weak from want of food, Suzanne is taken to the hospital. Louise now alone, puts up at a hotel and pays for her lodging with her last bit of money. Louise visits Suzanne at the hospital, finds her friend bestowed with every kindness and gaining in strength. As a visitor Louise is given a light lunch, which she eats greedily. One night the hotel proprietor finds Louise stretched out on the balcony almost completely covered with snow. She had deliberately exposed herself in order to go to the hospital. Louise is attended by the young physician who had previously offered assistance. Before leaving the hospital Dr Landis introduces Louise to his aunt, who obtains employment for her. Dr. Landis frequently visits the little patient and his persistent attentions wins her heart. THE MYSTERY OF SYDNEY STREET (Three parts).—Dorval, a wealthy stock broker, is found murdered in his library by his wife, who has just returned from an out-of-town visit. Detective Humbert finds on his desk the card of one Duruy, who owed Dorval a considerable sum of money. He trails Duruy, who proves an alibi, which satisfies the police, but does not convince Humbert. In his close association with Dorval's widow, Humbert falls madly in love with her, and she, thinking only of revenging her husband's violent death, unconsciously encourages him. Duruy meets Humbert and Dorval's widow at a mask ball and is attracted to Mme. Dorval without knowing who she is. Another man is arrested for Dorval's murder. At his trial evidence is introduced to show that the accused man had struck Dorval for speaking to his sweetheart and had left him for dead. But Dorval did not die at this man's hands. He was murdered in his library—killed by a knife thrust. Duruy is seized with an attack of epilepsy and confesses the crime. Pursued by Humbert, he jumps into the lake and is drowned. Thus does justice triumph beyond the pale of the law.

within calling. Apparently none of them could give him satisfaction, therefore he sent for Captain Lange, a special investigator whom he charged with the duty of arresting all who were assisting the Red Hand Gang. Lange was a widower and every Sunday he went to the convent school to spend a little time with his daughter Marie, a child of eight years. It was the eve of Christmas and he took Marie home to spend Christmas Eve with him. Before going home they attended Midnight Mass, and when in his rooms together he on his violin played and the little girl sang. Midway through they were interrupted by the arrival of a police officer who handed Lange an order from Fouche to meet him at once before a hotel door at the junction of two streets some distance away.

He was not at all pleased at the idea of leaving his daughter in the empty house, but realizing that his chief had been spurred to supreme efforts by the Emperor, he obeyed the order. At the street corner a surprise awaited him. Neither Fouche nor any other officer was there, and after perambulating the neighborhood for some time he returned home anxious to see his little girl. But she has disappeared, and a note was on the table stating that The Red Hand had kidnapped her, and she would be held as a hostage. In his extremity he went to the Commissioner of Police. He suggested that Lange should publish the report of his own death, so as to save his daughter from danger, and in order to assist him gave him a passport which authorized him to search for her in any part of the Empire. He adopted the suggestion of his chief and, going to the quayside, went down the steps, took off his hat and coat, and left them there with a note stating that in order to guard his daughter from injury from The Red Hand he had decided to do away with himself.

Marie, when kidnapped, was taken into a forest and there held until the chief of the gang communicated with his comrades. The stratagem succeeded. It was believed that Lange had committed suicide, and the leader wrote: "Captain Lange has committed suicide. Release the child at the edge of the forest."

It was Christmas time and the intruder, having usurped the place of Marie's father, was spending a thoroughly happy time. Coming from the midnight service the villagers congratulated the girl on having found her father, and it was a merry party that sat down at the gendarmerie to partake of the traditional supper in the early hours of Christmas morning.

While one wanderer had the seat of honor, another of his calling was knocking at the gates of the gendarmerie begging a night's lodging. He was accommodated in one of the cells of the prison, and while he was reflecting on the kindness of heart shown him by the gendarmerie, Marie in the next room was endeavoring to recall to her old father "the last carol they had sung together fifteen years before." But the old man had forgotten the carol which Marie remembered so well, and although she sang it to him it did not recall old memories to him, and it seemed strange to her that a recollection, which was so vivid to her, could have fled from him.

In the adjoining cell the old wanderer heard the singing and, taking his violin from the bag in which he had carefully treasured it for so many years, began to play the same tune. The sweet strains were heard in the next room, and the company demanded that the musician should be brought in to play to them. Marie had already recognized that carol which was being played, and when the old man was seated at the table opposite her supposed father, she asked him to repeat the air which meant so much to her. But before the old man could begin, he noticed that sitting on the other side of the table was the man who had stolen his passport. With the cry, "It was you who stole my passport," he sprang up and demanded to know why the other man had adopted the name of Lange. Marie learned that the newcomer was really her father, and her lover coming forward, the intruder was roughly thrust to the back of the room, and while he sat there bemoaning the fate which had overtaken him on Christmas morn, Lange played the carol while Marie sang.

THE BROKEN HEART (2 parts—Dec. 20).—The daily absence of young Grange led his father to institute inquiries and it was reported to him that his son met Lucy Balfour, a dressmaker, every evening. Harry Grange, the only son of William Grange, was Lucy's first love, and she was happy in the company of the young fellow who represented himself as being a clerk. His father saw the situation in a different light and after reminding his son that it would be fatal for him to compromise a young girl whom his station in society prevented him from marrying, forbade him to again meet her.

Although he was growing fond of the girl, Harry dared not disobey his father and wrote Lucy asking for forgiveness. He promised his father never to see her again, but he hoped that she at least would let him remain a devoted friend who would be of some service to her if ever there was need.

While the young man consoled himself with a young girl of his own station, Lucy suffered from the pain which no physician could cure and became very ill. So weak did she grow that her mother feared she was dying and in her extremity appealed to William Grange to allow his son to visit her dying daughter. Harry visited the girl and encouraged her to believe that he really loved her. So successful was the white lie he told that, looking forward to a rosy future, she rapidly recovered and was able to return to work. Believing that the girl was better and on the road to complete recovery, the young man had to break with her in order to keep faith with his father. He, therefore, wrote to Lucy's mother asking her to explain that he had been hurriedly called away on a long journey and did not know when he would be back. He dared not call to tell her of his departure, leaving to the mother the task of breaking the news.

This was a severe shock to the girl, but she was able to continue business. Life held no brightness for her now. She had recovered only to be pushed back again, and although she resolved to fight her weakness she knew that the struggle would not be a long one unless Harry came back into her life.

One day in the workroom a wedding dress was put in hand. It was of such a beautiful design that Lucy inquired the name of the bride, and from a newspaper learned that Harry Grange was to marry Miss Ruby Stewart at the beginning of the following month. Then she realized that all he had done for her during her illness was a deception carried out so that her health might return. That, however, was over; nothing that was done now could repair the injury. The end was fast approaching and she was fated to assist in the making of the wedding dress for the girl who had supplanted her.

Her employer saw that Lucy was deeply interested in the wedding dress and allowed her to take it home to finish. When her mother saw her at work on it she marveled. She did not know that it was in the girl's mind to don the dress when finished and live for a few minutes in an attire fate had decreed should not be hers. At last the dress was finished and the temptation to put it on being irresistible, Lucy stood before the mirror clad in the shimmering silk of the bridal gown. But it was too much for her and a little later her mother found her dead in her chair.

TO ERR IS HUMAN (3 parts—Dec. 27).—Mrs. Meral, the wife of a composer, was jealous of her husband's attachment to Lulu Komsky, a Russian dancer, who had inspired him in his greatest compositions. She insisted on her husband leaving the city, but the separation from Lulu Komsky so played on his mind that he found himself unable to complete his new ballet, "Beautiful Morn." Mattefs were reaching a climax when his wife remembered that a review was setting its readers the solution of a problem: What is your conception of the role a woman should hold near her husband if she marries a man of genius? Her reply was to compare the wife to a vestal, whose precise duty it was to keep up the flame of genius in order that it might never be extinguished. Having reached that conclusion, she wrote to Lulu Komsky saying her husband would be happy to know if she would agree to take the lead in "Beautiful Morn." This sacrifice gave Meral a revelation of nobleness greater than his genius—his wife's heart.

THE MYSTERY OF RICHMOND CASTLE (4 parts).—Peter Wilkes, tired of his connection with a disreputable secret order, requests its officers to release him from membership. He is released from further allegiance to the association upon the condition that he surrender to it any legacy that he might inherit. Shortly after this Wilkes learns that a firm of lawyers are advertising for him. In an interview with the lawyers, Wilkes is told that he is the next kin to a deceased nobleman and has inherited a sealed casket and a packet of papers. Wilkes finds the casket to contain valuable jewels and directions for locating additional treasure at Richmond Castle. Wilkes is now worried by the terms of his agreement with the order and decides to keep his wealth secret and ignore his promise. The attorney, although satisfied with the proofs which Wilkes produced, is none the less uneasy, and engages Grace Carter, a woman detective, to shadow Wilkes. Wilkes gains admission to Richmond Castle by posing as an artist interested in the interior, and while he is being conducted through the Castle, Grace Carter arrives unobserved. She disguises herself in an old court costume and assumes the pose of a wax figure which stands in the hall of the Castle. Thinking himself alone, Wilkes presses a secret spring, which causes the fireplace to roll aside, revealing a flight of steps to the vaults below. Followed by the detective, Wilkes proceeds to the vaults and discovers his treasure. After exciting experiences, Wilkes returns home, where Grace Carter calls upon him, and asks why he acts in such a suspicious and secretive manner if he is the legitimate heir. Wilkes gives the detective details of his previous connection with the order, and she promises to bring its members to account.

A messenger is ushered into Wilkes' study and reveals his identity as a member of the order. Wilkes escapes and fearing that the society will again attempt to harm him, decides to live in a hotel. Grace Carter pays him a visit next morning and together they plan to capture the conspirators. Fom the window Miss Carter sees two members of the society approaching the hotel. She dresses in one of Wilkes' tourist suits, while Wilkes secretes himself. The detective climbs through a window to an adjoining roof and the members of the order, thinking she is Wilkes, give chase. Racing across roofs, climbing chimneys and stacks, making hazardous jumps from roof to roof, sliding down a crane, jumping from a high bridge onto a passing motor boat, the detective finally escapes in an automobile. Late that night a boat is seen making its way swiftly down the river to the back of an old wharf. Those aboard the boat climb through an opening and cautiously make their way to an underground room, where the members of the order are gathered. A short sharp fight ensues, but all the members of the order are captured, handcuffed and led away to suffer the penalty of their crimes. A few weeks later Peter Wilkes is married to Grace Carter in the ivy-covered church attached to Richmond Castle. The happy pair assemble with their guests in the hall of the Castle, where glasses are raised and toasts are drunk to the future happiness of the bride and groom.

CHILDREN OF THE STAGE (Three parts).—Walther and his young wife, Leonie, are both great favorites of the stage. In spite of the great difference in their ages they are very happy together. During a gala performance in which Leonie plays "May," and Walther "Faust," a young actor in the company, Charles Lacour, who is seated in the actors' box, falls in love with Leonie. His passion leads him to enthusiastic applause. His ardour is noticed by Dora, the actress to whom he has been very attentive. After a reception that is given the players behind the scenes, the manager invites them all to a picnic. In the midst of the gayety, Walther falls and breaks his leg. The doctor is hopeful of a complete recovery, but to the actor it means that his career is over. Walther's despair increases as the months pass. He is deeply disturbed by Lacour's attention to Leonie and believes that she has encouraged him. Many disagreeable scenes are enacted between the couple. Leonie realizes all that Walther suffers and excuses him, but it is difficult for her to refuse the attentions of Lacour.

At the theater, Leonie and Lacour are to act together. A revolver, which is to be used in the play, is placed on Lacour's dressing table. The jealous Dora sees this and also Lacour, when he gives Leonie a bouquet. Dora goes to Lacour to remind him of their past relations, but he spurns her. She resolves to be revenged. Walther is in his wife's dressing room when Leonie enters with Lecour's flowers. There is a scene when the husband picks up a note which drops from the bouquet and reads, ". . . . Better for us both to make an end of it than to live on in this way . . ." He seizes a revolver and rushes to Lacour's room, where he finds Dora. While waiting the manager enters. During the interruption Dora changes the two revolvers. Lacour soon after comes in, takes the loaded revolver and hurries to the stage. Dora sees that her revenge is at hand. The accident occurs on the stage. Lacour shoots Leonie. The theater is thrown into confusion. The manager rushes for Walther, who in his excitement leaves the compromising note in the dressing room. Dora finds the note and gives it to a detective, who arrests Lacour.

Leonie, though seriously wounded, recovers. During her convalescence, Dora visits her and tells her of Lacour's arrest. Walther and Leonie have a stormy scene. "I have never deceived you," Leonie cries, "it is your duty to save Lacour from suffering punishment for a crime he has not committed. The husband promises to do all that is in his power. Dora, overcome by remorse, goes to the judge and confesses. Lacour is released. He meets Leonie for a last farewell. Walther is present and perceives where his duty lies. He writes a note to Leonie telling her that he and not Lacour must say "Farewell." His note ends, ". . . . I have no right to be in your way. I set you free."

VICTORY OR DEATH (Four parts).—Bernard, under the assumed name of Count DaMora, is a spy who wins the love of Blanche, the daughter of General Alberti. The general is entrusted with the keeping of a new bomb and the plans for making it, and Bernard is endeavoring to steal them. He calls on Blanche, presses a bouquet of flowers saturated with chloroform to her nostrils, enters the general's room and accomplishes his purpose. Blanche revives and goes in pursuit. Bernard sails on a steamer. Blanche misses the boat, but overtakes it in an aeroplane, dropping into the water from the airship and being pulled abroad by the sailors. A thrilling encounter takes place when she confronts Bernard in his stateroom with a revolver in her hand, but a fire breaks out, diverting her attention for a moment and he leaps upon her and overpowers her. He binds her and rushes to the deck, where the frantic and panic-stricken passengers are trying to make their escape from the burning craft. An awe-inspiring scene of a blazing vessel is shown, a number of explosions take place, and the huge craft dives to the bottom of the sea. Blanche is saved by working herself free of the bonds and leaping into the water, where she clings to wreckage. She is picked up by Wilkinson, a wealthy man cruising in his yacht. He offers his aid, and the two go to Bernard's country. Blanche disguises herself sufficiently to carry out a plan she has formulated, and meets Bernard. He calls the police to arrest her as a spy, but she disclaims his acquaintance, and when Wilkinson insists that she is his wife, Bernard is forced to the conclusion that the resemblance is only a strange coincidence. Blanche makes Bernard fall in love with her and makes an appointment in his home. Wilkinson accompanies her as her chauffeur and waits outside. Blanche drugs the wine of Bernard and as he is lapsing into unconsciousness she makes known her identity. She recovers the bombs and plans, and, leaping from the window into the automobile, whirls away. The police pursue in another automobile and a running pistol fight takes place. Wilkinson and Blanche reach a waiting aeroplane and fly away just out of reach of the bullets of their pursuers. They restore the articles to the general, whose honor is thus saved, and who willingly gives his consent when Wilkinson asks for the hand of Blanche.

DEATH'S DOOR (Two parts).—The Marquis of Sangallo leaves to try a new four-in-hand. Luisa, a pretty milliner, is engrossed in a book, and is knocked down. When Luisa is convalescent the Marquis becomes a constant visitor, and we see that they are deeply attached. Amerigo determines that nothing shall prevent his marrying Luisa. The Marchioness orders the family solicitor to notify Amerigo that he will be disinherited. The Marquis and Luisa are married, and soon find themselves in straightened circumstances. Amerigo goes in search for work. During his absence, the Marchioness calls, and makes Luisa an offer of money. Luisa refuses, her love being too strong. Amerigo is unsuccessful in his search, and is taken seriously ill. He grows worse, and Luisa writes to the Marchioness saying that if she will help them she will give up her husband. The Marchioness hastens to her son's bedside. There is an exceptionally dramatic scene as Luisa leaves her child and husband. Three years elapse, and the Marquis is to accompany his mother on a voyage. Reaching their destination the Marchioness and her son put up at a hotel. By a coincidence Luisa has procured a situation at this hotel, and determines that she will not make herself known to him. One night a ball is in progress, and the Marquis' little son has gone to the bedroom window. Luisa becomes fired with a desire to take her child again in her arms. Climbing on to the window ledge, she performs a hazardous journey to the room where her child is. She embraces the child, and then commences to return. While she is on the parapet she is seen by one of the guests. The Marquis and guests hasten into the grounds, and see Luisa finishing her perilous journey. Luisa hears the voices, loses her balance and crashes from the parapet into the grounds. She is carried into the hotel, where for some time she lies in a critical condition. By the time she has recovered the Marchioness has become reconciled to her, and a scene in which husband and wife are embraced by the Marchioness forms a fitting conclusion.

AMBROSIO.

A TRAGIC EXPERIMENT (2 parts—Dec. 13).—It is evening. The day's work over, the mechanics are leaving the factory homeward bound. John, upon Peter's invitation, accompanies him to his garret, where the inventor shows him some new plans for an aeroplane. In a humble coffee-house the following day the shopgirls of a neighboring dressmaking establishment are merrily lunching together with the workmen and are tempted by a lottery ticket agent to try their luck. The announcement day finally arrives. John, busy at work, learns through a newspaper that his is the winning number and joyfully rushes out to claim his fortune. Both John and Peter are in love with Thesi. Refusing the proposal of the newly made rich young man to enjoy with him his wealth, she keeps her appointment with Peter. That day they announce their betrothal, and in a short time are happily married.

A year elapses. Peter's friends are constructing the apparatus for his new aeroplane. Although Peter's supply of money is already exhausted he refuses John's patronizing proposal to forward the necessary capital to build the machine. Greatly disheartened the inventor returns to his home, almost determined to destroy his many months' hard labor, but Thesi encourages him to persevere and sells her few precious jewels as a last resource.

Peter's young apprentice, Philip, is aware of his employer's embarrassed financial circumstances. He imparts his knowledge to his fellow-workmen and together they contribute enough money to complete the work. With two other delegates, Philip goes to the inventor's home, where they are met by Thesi. Wishing to keep their generosity secret, they hit upon a plan to help them. While Thesi is busily engaged in conversation, Philip manages to leave the room unobserved. He enters the nursery, and sending away the maid on a pretext, quickly puts the money into the tiny hands of the infant, whose cries arouse Thesi. She then realizes what the true workmen have done for her husband. One day Peter receives a letter from the War Department, announcing that his aeroplane would be inspected at the Aviation Field by their Chief Inspector, and John, who has returned to the factory for a job having completely squandered his fortune in riotus living, learns the glad tidings. While Thesi is sitting in the park some time later, John sees her. His infatuation for her is still strong, and when he attempts to embrace her, she strikes him with a whip. Infuriated at the insult, he determines to seek vengeance.

The day for the trial of the aeroplane arrives. In the excitement John enters the factory unnoticed and succeeds in ruining part of the apparatus. The young apprentice, Philip, anxious that all be in perfect condition, makes a final inspection of the machine and discovers John at his treacherous deed. John hears him inform Peter and the Inspector of what he has learned. With no means of escape and fearing arrest, he decides to attempt the flight himself. Up, up the aeroplane goes; higher and higher she lightly mounts. She is now but a mere speck on the clear horizon, when suddenly there is a turn, and down she comes, crashing to the ground. John is removed from beneath the ruins. With his last efforts he confesses his base act, and begging forgiveness from Thesi and Peter, passes away to eternal rest.

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION (2 parts—Dec. 20).—Count Stephen Altieri loses in gambling his entire fortune, and is prevented from committing suicide by Mrs. Sarah Cleber, an adventuress, who loves him. Together they leave for the Riviera. Sarah's true character was unknown to Count Stephen. In the dead of night she steals along the corridor of the hotel and entering the apartment of the Marchioness Bernstein, robs her of her jewels. The next day the theft is discovered, but no suspicion whatsoever falls on Sarah or her companion. Count Altieri is reading an account of the robbery in the newspapers, when a sudden suspicion dawns upon him. In his search through Sarah's room, he discovers the stolen jewels, when she enters. He determines to reveal the truth, but she implores him to desist, and they leave the hotel unsuspected.

Count Altieri receives a letter from his lawyer, and learns he has been made heir to millions. Grasping the opportunity of finally ridding himself of Sarah, he encloses in a letter a check for a considerable sum of money, requesting her to forget him. Sarah destroys the check, determined to get satisfaction. The Count is now traveling, and one day meets Mary French, to whom he immediately becomes attracted. Upon closer view he is surprised to find that she is blind. His interest in her is awakened and he learns from the gardener that she was playing here when suddenly the balustrade broke down and her mother was hurled below and killed. The child from fright lost her sight.

They meet again at a musical given at her home, where he professes his love for her, and in a short time they are engaged. On arriving home late one evening, the Count instinctively feels the presence of Sarah, which makes him expectant. His door is cautiously opened—Sarah and Stephen meet again. The adventuress has not given up her old habits, and after a violent scene, she leaves him.

The next day Sarah follows him to Mary's home. Taking advantage of the moment Mary is alone, she hands the blind girl a note, and Stephen returns just as it is being read to her. The jealous and infuriated woman had denounced him as a common thief. The two lovers were standing at the fatal spot where the terrible misfortune had occurred, and Stephen, fearing to be condemned by Mary, hurls himself below into the deep ravine. Fortunately, he is saved. Mary, who was taken to the house in a hysterical condition, regains her power of sight from the terrible shock she has received.

It is twilight. The Count is moodily gazing into the fire when Mary cautiously enters the room and throwing the malicious note into the flames, finds happiness in her lover's arms.

PILOT.

HOODMAN BLIND (Five Parts).—A runaway accident separates Lennon from his wife and children, and deprives him of his memory. He boards an outgoing ship to Canada, where he assumes a new name and becomes a farmer. Little Jess, with her father at the time of the runaway, wanders off and falls in with a band of kind-hearted gypsies. Mrs. Lennon, knowing nothing of the runaway and its sad ending, believes herself deserted. Moving into a cheap room she takes in sewing, and for a short time is able to earn a bare livelihood for herself and Nance, twin sister of Jess. The continual montonous grind on the sewing machine soon plays havoc on her delicate constitution and she becomes ill. Unable to pay her rent, she is dispossessed. After miles of weary tramping they reach the house of Lezzard, a former suitor, where the mother falls exhausted. Lezzard brings her and Nance into the house. He does everything possible for his old love, but realizes she is very near the end. With her last breath she asks him to care for Nance, which he promises to do, although against the wishes of his wife.

Twenty years later we find Jess a favorite among the gypsies, and Nance a happy member of the Lezzard family: each ignorant of the other's existence. Bill, the gypsy king, and another gypsy, Tom, fight over Jess. Tom wins the fight and also the girl. In a jealous rage Bill orders them to leave the tribe. With their tambourine and fiddle they wander off, playing in the streets for a living. They finally reach Tremont Alley, where Jess incurs Tom's anger by assisting Tom Titt, a crippled waif.

Lezzard, now old and weak, wishes his son Mark to marry his adopted daughter, Nance. Mark's anger is aroused when Nance refuses his offer of marriage. Unknown to Lezzard and his son, Nance and Jack Yeulett are lovers. Lezzard dies of heart failure, and his body is discovered by Mark, who finds his father's last wish, saying that all his earthly possessions be shared equally by his son and adopted daughter. Filled with a jealous hatred, knowing Nance will not marry him, he destroys the paper.

Dame Fortune goes against Jack, and he meets with reverses at every step. He is unable to pay off the mortgage on his farm. Utterly discouraged he resorts to drink. He writes Nance a farewell letter, saying he intended asking her to become his wife, but that now it is too late, as he is very near to ruin. Nance immediately goes to him. Exacting his promise to give up drink she proves her love by marrying him, and together they start to save to pay off the mortgage. They become indebted to a grocer. Nance gives Jack some money she has saved to pay the bill; but Jack, noticing her admiring glances at a new cloak worn by a neighbor, uses the money to get a "little surprise" for Nance. The mortgage has been reduced by small payments, but the birth of little Kit prevents them from making even small payments, and foreclosure proceedings are threatened. Mark insults Nance by offering to pay off the mortgage for a kiss, for which he receives a slap in the face. He swears revenge. By a clever scheme he induces Jess and Tom to enact a love scene, and then persuades Jack to witness what Jack believes is a love scene between his wife and a gypsy. Jack returns home and accuses Nance of infidelity. He will listen to no explanation, and they separate. Taking little Kit with her Nance goes to the city.

An explosion restores Lennon's memory and he returns to England in search of his family, leaving with his steward the numbers of his banknotes. Finding no trace of his wife and children he seeks his old friend Lezzard. He learns from Mark of Lezzard's death. Lennon becomes seriously ill and Mark promises to find his family and give them Lennon's money and will. Mark appropriates the money to his own use. His embezzlement is discovered by Kridge, who blackmails him.

Tom becomes infatuated with a dancing girl and discards Jess. Jack goes to the city. There he sees and befriends Tom Titt. Tom Titt sees him looking at a picture of Nance and thinks it is Jess, and takes him out to find her. Jess, heartbroken, is about to end it all, but is rescued by Jack. Jess tells Jack the truth about Mark's scheme to deceive Jack into believing his wife false. In the meantime Polly and Ben, two of Nance's old friends on a jaunt to the city, find Nance and persuade her to return home and brave the gossips. Jack goes back and claims his wife and the twin sisters who kenw nothing of each other's existence are reunited. Tom Titt finds a home and has little Kit for a playmate. Tom quarrels with the dancing girl, who in a mad frenzy fatally injures him. Retribution is meted out to Mark and Kridge, whose crime is traced by the police through the numbers on the banknotes.

THE HERO OF A NATION—BAR-KOCHBA (Six Parts).—The story is laid in Palestine, sixty years after the destruction of the last temple by Titus. The lot of the Jews was not a happy one during the succeeding reigns, but they were a fairly contented people until Hadrian ascended the throne.

It is at this point that the opening scene of the picture begins, and leads the spectator back to the magnificent scenery of the Holy Land. It pictures Hadrian who decrees that Jerusalem be rebuilt as a Roman city. The temple is turned into an arena, where lions are roaring over the prey that is cast them, and bloody gladiatorial contests are presented. The oppression now becomes so terrible that the people can bear it no longer, and the vigorous younger party, under the leadership of Bar-Kochba, the noblest of the Jews, begins to sow the seeds of rebellion throughout the land. Now a flowery garden is presented to the sight, and the Oriental tribes that collect there to crown Bar-Kochba in secret are to offer their lives for the sake of a common cause.

But it is through Paphos, a Phoenician cripple, disappointed in his mad passion for Dinah, Bar-Kochba's beloved, that destruction descends upon every one With his insidious plots, he works upon Rufus to such an extent that he casts Dinah into a cell after accusing her father, Eleazar, the leader of the Council of Elders, of inciting the rebellion. Not content with all this mischief, Paphos informs Bar-Kochba of Dinah's imprisonment. Bar-Kochba hastens to the rescue and is seen just after the first chariot race entering the great arena, where a multitude of Romans are celebrating the downfall of Jerusalem. He defies Rufus and demands that Dinah be set free. Rufus commands Horatius to slay him. Defenseless as he is, Bar-Kochba sweeps him aside with one thrust of his mighty arm, but spares his life. Rufus now orders him cast to the lions. Bar-Kochba advances upon the raging beasts, quells them with his glance, and drives them into the crowded seats. Terrified, the Romans fly from the arena.

Bar-Kochba has been successful all along the line, and has driven the Romans into Magdala. Within the fortress Paphos makes a final effort to win Dinah, is repulsed again, and determines to cause her death. He watches Rufus staggering drunkenly into a cell. Dinah lures him, and is about to dispatch him when his wife, summoned by Paphos, saves him. A messenger excitedly announces that the Jews are attacking the town. On the advice of Paphos, Dinah is exposed on the battlements and threatened with death unless Bar-Kochba withdraws his army. Bar-Kochba is before the walls of Magdala. Dinah appears on the tower, but rather than hinder her people, dashes herself to pieces on the rocks below.

Infuriated by the death of Dinah, the Jews storm the town and set it on fire. The enemy perish in the ruins.

Three years of bloody warfare have swept the Romans from the land. Bar-Kochba, king of Judea, welcomes all the people to his realm, irrespective of race, creed or color. He would have kept the Romans at bay, in spite of the fact that Hadrian sent his best generals and the pick of his legionaries against him, were it not for the despicable treachery of Paphos, the Phoenician. Bar-Kochba trusts him blindly, and believes his accusation that Eleazar had surrendered Dinah to the Romans. Maddened by the terrible misfortunes that had befallen him, Bar-Kochba calls Eleazar traitor before the Elders and plunges a dagger into his breast. Just then news comes that the war has recommenced, and Bar-Kochba hastens to defend the frontier. But Bar-Kochba is beaten everywhere and driven into Bethar. Hope flickers for a moment, but Paphos commits his most stupendous piece of treachery. He leads the Romans by a secret passageway into the fortress, and the Jewish cause is lost. Bar-Kochba fights his way through the enemies' lines and tries to lead his reserves to the attack. But seeing all his efforts useless, he falls on his sword as Eleazar's spirit towers above him.

APEX.

THROUGH THE CLOUDS (Four Parts).—London, the hiding-place of criminals and political offenders, has become the headquarters of a band of international rogues, with Rudolf Berkman at their head. Sybil Marston is a member of the gang and Berkman uses her as a decoy in a bogus accident and thus they gain access into the house of Lord Denison, where they steal the famous Higby diamonds. Lord Denison, on discovering his loss, at once communicates with his friend Halifax Hilliard, a well known detective, who with his daughter Thelma, lives out Finchley way. Hilliard tracks the thieves to their lair, but is captured and incarcerated in a cellar. In a unique manner he gains his freedom. A passerby throws his finished cigar; it falls down the grating and burns his bonds. Meanwhile, Thelma, anxious at her father's non-appearance, proceeds to the house he had told her he was going to and, gains access through the window. She hesitates on entering the room and hearing footsteps hides in an ottoman just as her father staggers into the room, having escaped from the cellar. However, his freedom is short lived, for he is pounced upon by Berkman and the remainder of the gang, bound and gagged and placed on the ottoman.

Thelma in her hiding-place hears with horror the decision of Berkman to take Hilliard up in a balloon and cast him into the sea. As they take her father out, she escapes and dashing off, meets some aviators, to whom she tells her story. Gaining their sympathy, the well-known aviator, Verrier, agrees to take her up in his aeroplane and a chase through the clouds ensues. One of the gangsters meets his deserts from a well aimed shot by Thelma and as the aeroplane passes below the balloon containing her father, the plucky girl leaps and catching a guide rope climbs up and up, finally reaching the basket, where she releases her father. Tugging at the valve they descend at Leatherhead, where instructions are wired to the police and the house of the international thieves is surrounded. On the arrival of Hilliard, the place is raided and the thieves attempt to hide in an old well, but a water-pipe bursts and they nearly lose their lives, only being saved by their arrest by Hilliard. The jewels are recovered and Thelma receives a magnificent reward for her perilous journey.

THE GHOST CLUB (Six Parts).—Rudolph Morton, a civil engineer, is constructing a railway in India for James Dexter, an English millionaire. Rudolph incurs the hatred of Rajah Nadir, who is ruler of the province in which he is working, and to injure him, the Rajah orders his servant, Ali, to steal Rudolph's plans. Ali carries out his orders and delivers the plans to his master, who upon examining them, discovers a photograph of Elsie Dexter, who is Rudolph's fiancee; also a cable from Elsie, asking Rudolph to try to purchase for her Rajah Nadir's splendid collection of antique rugs. The Rajah at once falls in love with Elsie through her photograph, and he immediately leaves for Europe, taking his rugs with him, and is determined to win her. On his arrival, he sends the rugs as a present to Elsie, and to further his plans, he is made president of a European branch of a desperate society called the Ghost Club.

Rudolph, while attending a reception given at James Dexter's mansion, witnesses the receipt of an anonymous note to Mr. Dexter, containing a warning that his daughter Elsie's life is in danger, being threatened by the Ghost Club. Mr. Dexter and Rudolph thereupon decide to keep an all night watch. However, notwithstanding their vigilance, two messengers of the Ghost Club mysteriously enter the house, and leave behind them a threatening letter. A few days elapse, and while Elsie is returning home from a charity visit, she is waylaid and attacked by the Ghost Club's assassins. Rajah Nadir, knowing of the plans of the Ghost Club, in the disguise of a workman, rescues her from the band, and hastens away without disclosing his identity. Later, however, he communicates with Elsie and informs her that he will attend her father's masquerade ball, providing she will send two invitations to the Black Dragon Inn. This Elsie does, and the Rajah presents himself at the ball with his native servant, Ali. Meeting Elsie, he immediately declares his love for her, and succeeds in winning her heart.

Rudolph, mad with jealousy, readily falls into the trap set by Ali, which is a pretense to plot with him against the Rajah. His first step is to persuade Rudolph to join the Ghost Club, one of the rules of which is that the world must believe him dead. In order to obey this rule, Ali gives him a stupefying drug; later he is found unconscious; the general belief is that he has committed suicide. This belief is strengthened by the fact that Ali at the right moment discharges a pistol, which he places beside Rudolph. Rajah Nadir, in the guise of a friend, then takes Rudolph to his own home, and when he recovers from the effects of the drug, he is made a member of the Ghost Club. During the ceremony he recognizes in the president, Nadir, his rival in love; and incensed with anger, he demands revenge, which is denied him; so he follows Nadir to his home, but there again his plans are frustrated, as he is no match for the Rajah, and is soon overpowered. He is then forced to write a letter to Elsie, declaring that he wishes to be revenged against her. Nadir sends this note to Elsie, with a request that she meet him by the lake. He steals the funds of the Ghost Club, and meeting Elsie at the appointed hour, he elopes with her, Rudolph and the other members of the Ghost Club pursuing them. He boards the same train taken by Elsie and Nadir, while the other members hasten off to attempt to undermine a bridge over which the train passes. In attempting to escape from Rudolph, Elsie and Nadir leap from the fast moving train and both are killed, the result of unfaithfulness.

THE PHANTOSCOPE

IS MORE THAN JUST A SMALL PROJECTOR

It is a machine you carry about with you in a case furnished with it; set up in any school room, office or church; and project large pictures with current taken from any convenient lamp socket. It takes standard film and is fitted with standard lenses. It is small and inexpensive because it is simple, and simplicity requires the highest type of inventive skill. The work it does is surprising, and the more you know about motion picture machines the more surprising it is.

Put us to the test that others are, i.e., mail us a $5 deposit and ask us to send a Phantoscope C. O. D., privilege of thorough examination. It will be the beginning of big profits for you.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

Sargent's Photoplay Service
To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:
Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.
Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.
Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Selig

In conformity with promise to its patrons, the Selig Polyscope Company will release, on December 29th, "THE ADVENTURES OF KATHLYN." This is the first of a series of Orienta romances, picturized from the pen of Harold MacGrath, that in point of thrilling interest, in daring adventure with the savage denizens of Jungle Land, and in spectacular magnificence, surpass any photoplays ever forwarded.

The Unwelcome Throne

"THE ADVENTURES OF KATHLYN"

THE UNWELCOME THRONE

A beautiful young American, by strange stress of Fate, is placed upon an unwelcome throne by frenzied fanatics. Her adventures with wild animals, and with even more crafty and cruel men, make the start of the series exciting enough to satisfy the most exacting.

In Three Reels—Released December 29th

December 30th "THE STOLEN HEART"

This comedy is by Will M. Hough, author of many stage successes during the past decade, and derives a lot of fun from young swells and pretty girls amid picturesque surroundings.

December 31st "FATHER'S DAY"

A touching story of why boys leave the farm in favor of the city. The hero of this, on sober second thought, returns home, a wiser and a better man.

January 1st "GOOD RESOLUTIONS"

The Canadian Northwest is still a wild land of romance, and the Royal Mounted Police are among its daring and adventurous personages. This play tells how the wearer of the Victoria Cross redeemed himself.

January 2nd "AT CROSS PURPOSES"

A clever comedy romance, dealing with a distinguished authoress, who sends her maid's picture to an unknown admirer, which causes very amusing complications.

On the same reel with "BUSTER AND SUNSHINE"

A juvenile comedy in which guileless youth shows the winning way to knowing age.

N. B.—Attention of Exhibitors is particularly called to SELIG'S new line of attractive paper. One sheets for every attraction, three sheets for the two-reel releases, and additional six sheets stands for special releases. Make the lobby of your house attractive with this colorful illumination.
